Ex-Mon worker fined

Used assessor's office for personal business

BY TRACY EDDY

The Dominion Post

The state Ethics Commission found that a former county employee was operating a private business out of the Monongalia County Assessor's Office.

Richard Raspa, a former deputy assessor who dealt with homestead exemptions, must pay a fine and reimburse the assessor's office for the time and equipment he devoted to his private business during the past two years — a total of $7,600.

He also sold a large portion of his business, Raspa & Associates LLC, in November 2009, to further comply with the Ethics Act, according to a settlement agreement provided by the state Ethics Commission.

The settlement agreement was released Friday after the state Ethics Commission approved it Thursday.

The commission initiated the complaint against Raspa in March 2009, the agreement says.

According to state code, it is against the law for a public official or public employee to use his or her office for private gain. Using government property for personal projects that result in private gain is also prohibited.

Last month, Raspa retired from his position at the assessor's office. He also represented the assessor's office during the county's Board of Equalization and Review hearings.

The more things change ...

A county can grow a lot in just a few years.

The Dominion Post
 In 2009, Morgantown and Monongalia County were in the national spotlight. But not because of WVU sports teams. The nation's attention was turned to this little section of the Mountain State because, in a major economic downturn, it appeared to be recession proof and full of change. So much change, it seems every day is filled with new construction. For relative newcomers, some areas have always been retail developments. Old-timers can remember when the same areas were just grassy fields or forested hillsides. The Dominion Post has been charting these changes by way of regular aerial photo shoots through the county. Photos taken this year show extensive construction and completed complexes north of Morgantown, on the WVU Health Sciences campus, in Morgantown's Wharf District and at Cheat Lake. There are new restaurants, stores, residential complexes, transportation buildings, research buildings, a new event facility and highway. Photos of the same areas from previous years allow you to see just how much the face of metro Morgantown has changed. More photos, and descriptions of the projects are on Page 4A-5A.

City hires fire chief

Mark Caravastos to take over helm

BY ALEX LANG

The Dominion Post

Morgantown Fire Capt. Mark Caravastos is no longer a captain — he will be the new fire chief.

Caravastos said he learned he would head the city's fire department on Friday. Chief Dave Fetty announced his retirement in February. Interim Chief Bill Graham will also retire.

Caravastos said he was in "utter disbelief" when he found out about the promotion. When he took the test, he was unsure how he did. But Friday, he found out.

Caravastos, 47, has been a firefighter for the past 31 years, 23 of those with the Morgantown Fire Department. He grew up in Morgantown and graduated from Morgantown High School, in 1981, before going to Fairmont State University.

He and his wife, Rhonda, have two children, Amber and Xanthe.

Caravastos said he was unsure of his exact start date, but expected it to be in the middle of the month. He was also unsure of what his first order of business would be, but he did know it is going to take time to get used to the administrative side. "It's going to be a learning experience," Caravastos said.

During his time as a firefighter, he has always been with an engine company, he said. "There's always going to be a piece of me that's going to be on that side," Caravastos said.

With the new title comes new responsibility, and Caravastos said he was both excited and nervous about being the department's spokesman and the person who has to make final decisions. One of the first tasks will be filling his old position, Caravastos said. He'll also need to fill another position due to Graham's retirement.

The current firefighters should help make the transition to administration easier, Caravastos said.

Gulf oil spill's threat to wildlife turns real

- Cap collects some oil even as slick taints beaches. Page 5-B.
- BP CEO repeats promise to pay oil spill claims. Page 5-B.
- Jimmy Buffett laments fouling of his paradise. Page 5-D.

Associated Press

ON BARATARIA BAY, La. — The wildlife apocalypse along the Gulf Coast that everyone has feared for weeks is fast becoming a terrible reality.

Pelicans struggle to free themselves from oil, thick as tar, that gathers in hip-deep pools, while others stretch out useless wings, feathers dripping with crude. Dead birds and dolphins wash ashore, coated in the sludge. Seashells that once glinted pearly white under the hot June sun are stained crimson.

Scenes like this played out along miles of shoreline Saturday, nearly seven weeks after a BP rig exploded and the wellhead a mile below the surface began belching millions of gallons of oil.

With no oil response workers on Queen Bess, Plaquemines Parish coastal zone management director P.J. Hahn decided he could wait no longer, pulling an exhausted brown pelican from the oil, the slime dripping from its wings.

"We're in the sixth week, you'd think there would be a flotilla of people out here," Hahn said. "As you can see, we're so far behind the curve in this thing."

After six weeks with one to four birds a day coming into Louisiana's rescue center for oiled birds at Fort Jackson, 53 arrived Thursday and another 13 Friday morning, with more on the way. Federal authorities say 792 dead birds, sea turtles, dolphins and other wildlife have been collected from the Gulf of Mexico and its coastline.

Yet scientists said the wildlife death toll remains relatively modest, well below the tens of thousand of birds, otters and other creatures killed after the Exxon Valdez ran aground in Alaska's Prince William Sound. The numbers have stayed comparatively low because the Deepwater Horizon rig was 50 miles off the coast and most of the oil has stayed in the open sea. The Valdez ran aground on a reef close to land, in a more enclosed setting.

Experts said the Gulf's marshes, beaches and coastal waters, which nurture a dazzling array of life, could be transformed into killing fields, though the die-off could take months or years and unfold largely out of sight.

"People naturally tend to focus on things that are most conspicuous, like oiled birds, but in my opinion the impacts on fisheries will be much more severe," said Rich Ambrose, director of the environmental science and engineering at program at UCLA.

Baseball team renames 'BP' to protest oil spill

Associated Press

VIERA, Fla. — In a protest over the Gulf oil spill, a minor league baseball team is changing the name of batting practice so the players will no longer have to utter the letters "BP."

The Brevard County Manatees of the Florida State League said they will now take "hitting rehearsal."

Players commonly refer to batting practice as "BP," the same name as the petroleum company responsible for the massive oil spill that is fouling beaches along the Gulf Coast.

The Manatees are a Single-A affiliate of the Milwaukee Brewers. They play near Florida's Atlantic coast, away from the Gulf.

THE DOMINION POST - WEEK IN REVIEW

Sunday
State OKs road work contracts

CHARLESTON — Three Preston County road projects took another step forward, as the Division of Highways awarded construction contracts in its two most recent rounds of funding.

The DOH awarded $205,598.96 to CL Belt Construction, of Dorothy in Logan County, on Tuesday to renovate the Bretz Arch Bridge on W.Va. 7.

It also awarded, on May 21, $1.09 million to Dodd General Contractors, of St. Marys, to resurface a portion of W.Va. 92, Newburg Road. And it awarded $405,492.85 to SMH Construction, of Bradley, to replace the West Clifton Mills Bridge on Preston County 4/2.

These are just three of many DOH projects slated for the area for the coming months.

Assistant prosecutor resigns in Preston County

KINGWOOD — Mel Snyder has a job opening.

The Preston County Prosecuting Attorney said Friday that James Shay Jr., an assistant prosecutor, will end his employment June 7.

Shay has accepted a position as an expert witness recruiter.

"It is with great sadness that I announce that Jay Shay is leaving," Snyder said. "He has been an exceptional assistant prosecuting attorney for us for 5 1/2 years. He's been our drug prosecutor, and I would suspect he's prosecuted more drug cases than any other prosecutor in the county."

Local man tracks down owner of WWII memento

Rob Boyce lifted the top off the secondhand board game he'd just paid $2 for at Goodwill in the Mountaineer Mall.

Little Jason wanted it. In fact, as the Boyce family strolled past the store on their way to Walmart that early spring day in 2008, the toddler saw the toys all stacked up and irresistible in the Goodwill window and took off toward the store.

Of course, the family followed.

"There was this board game — I wish I could remember the name of it — but I mean, it didn't even have all its pieces," Boyce, 28, said one morning just before Memorial Day, as he began to tell the saga of Leland Harless' dog tags.

Once they got home, Boyce opened the game, checking for anything small enough for a child to choke on when he heard a rattle. He took out the game pieces, lifted the game board and, nestled beneath the cardboard at the bottom of the box, he saw two lightweight metal tags attached to a chain.

OLLI leader wants grants cut

Joseph Greene, the new executive director of the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute (OLLI) at WVU Center on Aging, hopes to see the organization become more financially self-sufficient and less reliant on its yearly grant funding.

"We're in a bit of a transition period. ... I see my role here as bridging that gap," Greene said.

OLLI, a membership group for people ages 50 and above to continue learning through classes, lectures and trips, is one of more than 100 such organizations that receive funding from the Bernard Osher Foundation, according to Greene.

Currently, OLLI at WVU relies on the yearly $100,000 grants and annual membership fees for funding.

Greene compared the steps to fiscal independence the institute is taking to a child learning to ride a bicycle, and said they are currently in the training-wheel stage. The goal is to get an endowment in the next few years, and use it to "live within our means."

Tuesday
Mon schools get $356K for Internet

Monongalia County Schools received more than $356,000 in federal subsidies to pay for telecommunications and Internet access.

Preston Schools received more than $132,000 in subsidies.

The subsidies come in the form of E-Rate discounts from the Federal Communications Commission. The E-Rate program was created in 1996 and West Virginia schools began receiving them in 1998, according to Sen. Jay Rockefeller's office.

Rockefeller, D-W.Va., created the program through an amendment to the 1996 telecommunications act, his office said. The program is meant to help schools and libraries afford services.

According to the Education and Library Networks Coalition, E-Rate provides $2.25 billion in discounts annually for telecommunications services, Internet access and internal connections to public libraries and public and private schools.

9 from Mon used online voting system

Some Monongalia County residents used the Internet to cast their ballots for this month's primary election — part of a state pilot program that allowed members of the military and other residents living out of the country to vote online.

According to the Secretary of State's Office, five counties participated in the pilot program — Mon, Jackson, Kanawha, Marshall and Wood.

Mon County Clerk Carye Blaney said nine of the county's registered voters requested the opportunity to participate in the program during the primary election.

All nine cast their ballots online — meaning Mon County had 100 percent voter turnout, as far as online vot-

Blaney said she hopes to see even more of the county's residents take advantage of the program during the November general election.

Wednesday
Man dies after lake incident

The man pulled from Cheat Lake on Memorial Day after a swimming accident died at Ruby Memorial Hospital on Tuesday, Monongalia County Sheriff Al Kiser said.

James "Butch" Elli Jr., 50, of Round Bottom Road in Morgantown, was swimming in the backwaters of Cheat Lake, off Morgan Run Road on Monday afternoon when he began to have trouble and yelled for help, the sheriff's department said in a press release. Elli had been trying to swim across the lake.

Nearby boaters pulled him out of the river after he went under. Since Elli didn't have a pulse and wasn't breathing, some boaters and swimmers began CPR on him and continued until Mon EMS arrived, the sheriff's department said.

The medical examiner's office determined that Elli died as a result of complications sustained from nearly drowning. Alcohol was in his system and may have been a contributing factor in the incident, the sheriff's department said.

City ups insurance premiums

City employees will start paying 11 percent more a month in contributions to their health insurance premiums.

It's the first time in 18 years employees will see an increase in their monthly payments.

During its Tuesday meeting, the Morgantown City Council approved the increase, as well as a "spousal carveout" program, in an effort to reduce its health insurance costs.

City Manager Dan Boroff said Morgantown could be responsible for an extra $1.5 million a year to cover the cost of its Other Post-Employment Benefits (OPEB) — specifically, health insurance for its retirees.

The city currently pays more than $3.1 million for health insurance.

Now, the employees' contributions to their premiums will increase each year, based on the amount the health insurance costs go up for that year.

Boroff said employees will pay about $49.95 per month for family coverage — a $4.95 increase. The city has 261 employees.

Retirees will pay $219.78 per month for their insurance, which is a $21.78 increase.

Thursday
Residents sue county

Eighty-one county taxpayers filed suit against the Monongalia County Commission this week, protesting the county's levy rate.

According to the suit, the taxpayers believe the levy rate should be lowered, the 2010-'11 budget should be redone and the county should not spend any money that is not already appropriated.

The state has already approved Mon County's levy rates and the 2010-'11 budget, which is about $34 million. The levy rates are the same as those being used for the current fiscal year.

Some county residents objected to the levy rate in April when the County Commission met to set the rate.

Cheat Lake Middle closes

The scene at Cheat Lake Middle School on Wednesday was similar to other schools' last day of the year.

Students hugged teachers and said goodbye for the summer. Others gathered their possessions. A few walked around, looking for people to sign their yearbooks.

But there was a major difference. Countless boxes were stacked in classrooms, hallways and the gym.

The boxes displayed the significance of this day for Cheat Lake Middle — because for the school, it was truly the last day.

This week, teachers and staff will move their supplies to the old University High School, which becomes Mountaineer Middle School.

"There's never going to be a replacement for Cheat Lake Middle," teacher Sharon DeWitt said. DeWitt said she has been teaching at the school for "150 years." She said Wednesday was an emotional day as it was the end of special memories made there.

WVU shooter wins gold at World Cup

WVU rising senior Nicco Campriani shot a winning score of 703.2 and secured the gold medal in the men's 50-meter rifle prone Sunday, at the Fort Benning (Ga.) World Cup-USA.

The two-time National Rifle Association All-American shot a near-perfect 599 (99, 100, 100, 100, 100) in the final qualification round before tallying 104.2. Representing Italy, the Florence native barely qualified for the final — he shot 586 in an elimination round Saturday.

"I won at the last shot, at the last shot!" Campriani exclaimed to the International Shooting Sport Federation following his win. "I really did not expect this medal. Prone is my backup event; I'm only ranked 93rd in the world. Today is my personal-best score."

Campriani placed third in the 50-meter 3 position on May 27 (1,272.5) and tied for ninth in 10-meter air rifle.

Grand Central for sale

The Warner brothers put the Grand Central Central Business Center up for sale.

Old Colony Realtors lists the property at an asking price of $7 million, according to an ad in The Dominion Post. Realtor Jeff Goff, the agent handling the listing, said the property was posted April 28.

Grand Central — on University Avenue between WVU's two campuses — is a business incubator and office space, including two buildings totaling 98,635 square feet.

Co-owner Kris Warner said that by posting the property, they will see what potential buyers see as the property's best use — whether to continue as a business and incubator site, or possibly use it as a Planned Unit Development (PUD) site for apartments. PUD is a designation for a mixed-use (not strictly residential) development district.

I-68 shut down as cars burn on carrier

A car-carrier fire damaged six vehicles, shut down Interstate 68 and caused long backups Thursday.

The fire occurred at about 2:30 p.m. near the Cheat Lake Exit on eastbound Interstate 68.

Driver Jeff Dell'Acqua said he was driving normally along the highway, until he noticed smoke. He said he recently had his brakes fixed in Fairmont, and smoke wasn't unusual for new brakes.

He traveled a little bit farther and noticed the smoke increasing and turning black. He was taking the cars from Kentucky to dealerships in the Baltimore area.

Dell'Acqua said, when he got out, he noticed the tires were on fire. He said only one thing went through his mind.

"I got to get it out," Dell'Acqua said of the fire. Then, "I want to save the cars."

Saturday*Dan Boroff to retire

Morgantown City Manager Dan Boroff is retiring in October. It's up to the City Council to find his replacement. Mayor Bill Byrne said Council would start discussing how it would go about doing so next week.

Boroff, 61, informed City Council and city staff earlier this week that he planned to retire, effective Oct. 1, he told The Dominion Post on Friday.

He has been Morgantown's city manager for 18 years. His salary is about $118,000, including longevity pay.

"It was a very difficult decision," he said. "I have mixed feelings about it. But I think the time is right."

WVU looks at $5M pay increase

CHARLESTON — WVU's $901 million Fiscal Year 2011 budget includes a $5 million pool of money for raises, but no plan for how to spend it, finance Vice President Narvel Weese told the Board of Governors (BOG) on Friday.

The plan on how to divvy up the money will be laid out at the September BOG meeting, he said, after more research and deliberation.

But the lack of a plan led Jo Morrow, BOG classified staff representative, to vote against the budget, she told The Dominion Post. She offered one of two nays as the BOG passed the budget by voice vote.

"Classified staff is disappointed," she said.

When The Dominion Post contacted Raspa for comment, he referred all questions to his attorney, Robert Berryman, who did not respond in time for this report.

County Assessor Rodney Pyles said he doesn't believe Raspa used his time at the assessor's office to do work for his private business.

He said he knew Raspa was being investigated. But Pyles said he had not yet seen the agreement, and declined to comment on it.

Raspa will have to pay a $1,500 fine, according to the agreement. He will have to reimburse the County Assessor's Office $5,200, and the state Ethics Commission $900 for its investigation.

The fines and reimbursements are split up into several monthly payments.

The agreement says, the money Raspa is reimbursing the assessor's office will go into its valuation fund.

The valuation fund is made up of 2 percent of all the taxes the assessor's office collects in a year. Assessors use the money to do property valuations. The agreement says, Raspa's first payment to the county assessor's office — $325 — is due June 15.

Raspa owned Raspa & Associates — a company that focuses on security and private investigation services — since at least November 2000, the agreement says.

According to the agreement, Raspa said he used a computer, printer, copier and fax machine in the assessor's office to draft letters, balance business accounts and write reports for his private business.

Raspa said he used his own paper and he only used the equipment after regular business hours, when the assessor's office wasn't open. Raspa said he received permission to do so from his superiors.

Pyles said Raspa admitted he once came into the office, on a weekend, to use a computer and printer because his own weren't working. Raspa used his own paper to print, Pyles said. Pyles said he doesn't believe there were any other instances.

The state Ethics Commission also found that Raspa occasionally conduct his private business — such as filing paperwork, serving subpoenas and assisting with traffic duties and/or private security detail — during work hours at the assessor's office without taking leave. Raspa & Associates employees came to the assessor's office to meet with Raspa or to pick up paychecks.

Raspa said he only conducted private business after work hours or while he was on breaks at the assessor's office, but he does acknowledge that he never took leave to do so, the agreement says.

Raspa also said that any work he performed for his private business during the assessor's office's regular business hours "did not retract from his ability to completely fulfill his responsibilities as deputy assessor," according to the agreement.

If Raspa was still employed at the assessor's office, the agreement states he would have to stop using computers and other equipment in the assessor's office for his private business, clock out if he plans to leave the assessor's office during the day to do work for his private business and keep a written log of all private business activities that occur during the work day.

MON FAYETTE EXPRESSWAY

The terrain to the north of Cheat Lake has shown massive changes as each installment of the Mason-Dixon link of the Mon-Fayette Expressway goes under construction.

Today, it's an explosion of work as an influx of federal funds allows West Virginia to do the last step—connecting the expressway to Interstate 68 at the Cheat Lake interchange. Until 2006, very little work had been done in that area because of the multi-million dollar cost.

Then, contracts were let to build the highway from Goodwin Hill Road to the site of the new interchange. Green hillsides (left) became fields of dirt as the trees were stripped away. Right, the extent of the work needed to complete the interchange can be seen in the aerial photograph showing the footprint of the new highway to the I-68 Cheat Lake interchange (right).

When complete, the expressway will be a direct route from Cheat Lake to Pittsburgh. The Pennsylvania end is being built by the Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission and is a toll road. In West Virginia, there is no charge. The expressway is W.Va. 43 in the Mountain State and Pa. 43 in the Keystone State.

MYLAN PARK

Mylan Park, on Chaplin Hill Road, has grown rapidly from an idea to today's recreation and event complex that's home to everything from high school baseball teams to the summertime Mountainfest motorcycle rally.

In 2004, the park was primarily Anker Fields, four baseball/softball fields; some office buildings and the West Virginia Miracle Sports Complex, with a rubberized surface to allow those with disabilities to play baseball.

By 2007, Mylan Park had grown to include Mylan Park Elementary School (just inside the entrance), Stepping Stones, a recreational center for people with disabilities; and a 24-court permanent horseshoe pitch.

In 2010, the three-year-old $3 million J.W. and Hazel Ruby Community Center was in full operation, while the fields next to it, originally proposed as soccer fields, serve for parking. A new PACE Enterprises facility sheltered workshop was dedicated earlier this year.

Described as one of West Virginia's most exciting multi-purpose complexes, it also offers the Pro Performance Sports Plex, a state-of-the-art indoor facility for recreational athletics, training, clinics and special events.

SUNCREST TOWNE CENTRE

The construction of Suncrest Towne Centre and Suncrest Village condominium complex, sandwiching W.Va. 705 just west of Stewartstown Road, has turned green fields into a massive residential and retail complex.

The north side of the road is residential, with the nine-building Suncrest Village condominiums just off the relocated entrance to Maple Drive offering easy access to the WVU Research Park as well as the Monongalia General Hospital and WVU Health Sciences complexes.

The south side of the road is Suncrest Towne Centre retail complex, estimated to cost $50 million, that's still under development. A highlight of the complex, shown in the upper right corner of the 2010 picture, is the 85,000-square-foot Kroger supermarket. In 2004, looking south from the W.Va. 705 and Burroughs Run intersection there was excavation for the Damon's Grill and, visible in the field below, the excavation to remove remains of Native Americans found on the property.

The 2007 view, looking south across both properties, shows five completed condominium buildings and a completed Damon's, as well as the new Maple Drive intersection. Things are getting busy in the 2010 shot, with nine condominiums, the swimming pool and pool building in, as well as major progress in the retail area. The Towne Centre and a Hilton Garden Inn are open, as are a new building housing the WVU Heart Institute, a My Bank! First United Bank & Trust, McDonald's and.

The metal skeletons of three office buildings-to-be stand at upper left. Since this picture was taken, a Sonic opened next to McDonald's, the parking and roads have been finished, and several shops and restaurants have opened, with others to open later this fall.

UNIVERSITY TOWN CENTRE

Visible next to the Cracker Barrel is the new Fairfield Inn and Suites hotel. Freestanding stores along the entrance road include Best Buy, Barnes & Noble and Giant Eagle. A 12-plex Hollywood Theatre perches on the hill behind the mall. Adjoining, but not part of University Town Centre, are the white roofs of a Sam's Club and Walmart. Walmart purchased the land for $4.2 million to build the two stores. Interstate Development developed the University Town Centre complex.

The biggest of the Morgantown area's recent retail projects is located atop a mountain in Granville – University Town Centre. The centerpiece is a strip mall anchored by Target, Petco, Bed Bath & Beyond, and T.J. Maxx.

In 2004, the structure of what-is-to-come could be seen in the areas cleared for construction. A white roof at the rear of the picture marks the Target store.

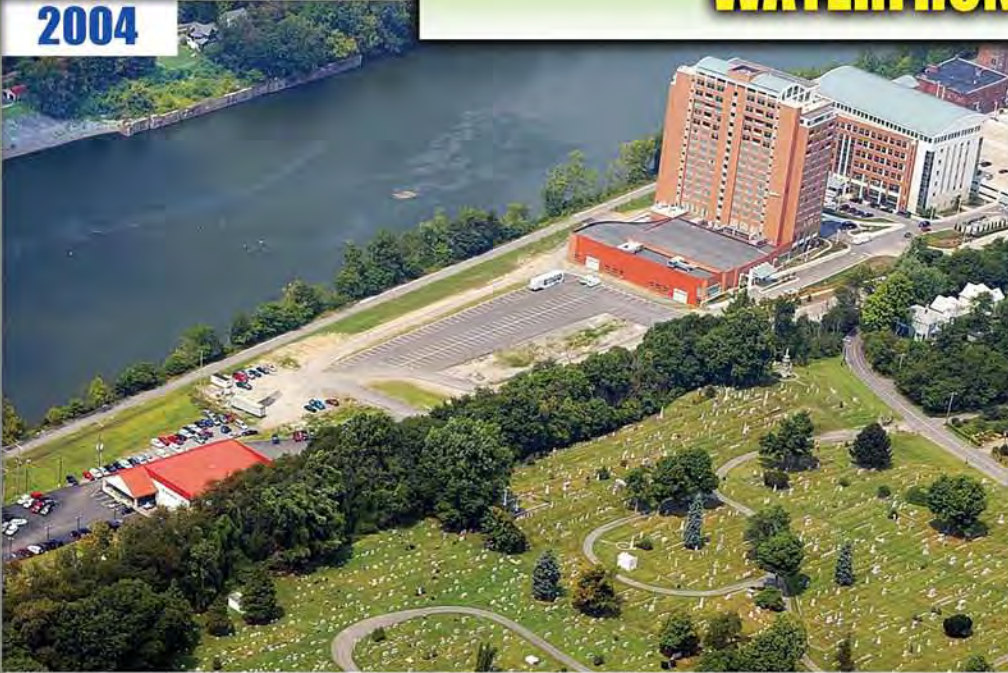

In 2010, most of the space has occupants. The main road leads through "Restaurant Row," offering Chili's, Longhorn Steak House, Cheddar's, Olive Garden, Red Lobster and a Cracker Barrel, with Cic's Pizza and Evergreen Buffet in the mall itself.

WATERFRONT PLACE

Partially financed through a $13.9 million West Virginia Economic Development Grant for Morgantown's Waterfront, the new $22 million Morgantown Event Center at Waterfront Place is bringing the sound of music to the banks of the Monongahela River. Designed to flow fluidly from the parking garage to the hotel, the two-story event center not only offers a place for events of all kinds, but brought a permanent home for the West Virginia Public Theatre. The theater's first production at its new home will be "Hairspray," on June 22-27. The state grant also financed the construction of a public marina on the river near the hotel complex.

WVU ROBERT C. BYRD HEALTH SCIENCES CENTER

At the WVU Robert C. Byrd Health Sciences Center campus, two buildings created a major change in the campus view between 2004 and 2010. A parking lot on the main campus, across from the cancer center, is home to the $30 million 78,000-square-foot Blanchette Rockefeller Neurosciences Institute. There, scientists are studying the memory and memory disorders, such as Alzheimer's disease.

Nestled against the hillside below the Med Center PRT station is the $16 million Mountaineer Station, WVU's 7,000-square-foot intermodal transportation center. It has parking for 500 vehicles, a Mountain Line bus stop, bicycle storage, elevator access to the PRT station and HSC campus, and offices for the WVU Department of Transportation and Parking.

Gabriel Brothers offers job program

Submitted to The Dominion Post

While the news on the employment front has not been positive during these tough economic times, one growing company is offering summer job opportunities for high school students.

Off-price retailer Gabriel Brothers will hold its summer employment program for a second year. The program is designed to educate and prepare high school students for a possible future in retail or any other business.

This year, the company will conduct two sessions: Session 1 is June 14-July 9 and Session 2 is July 12-Aug. 6.

The program is open only to high school students and will take place at the company's distribution center in Morgantown. Students will work from 8 a.m.-noon Monday through Friday and will be involved in processing merchandise to be distributed through the Gabriel Brothers and affiliate Rugged Wearhouse retail chains.

There will also be formal training sessions for the students on subjects such as preparing a resume, workplace etiquette and career strategies.

Interested students are asked to call or e-mail Laura Kraft: 304-225-7172, laura.kraft@gabes.net.

"Last year we broke away from tradition and hired high school students to work in our Morgantown distribution center for the summer, and we had positive results," said Don Mancini, vice president of human resources for Gabriel Brothers. "Given the difficulties in the job market, this is an excellent opportunity to provide these young people job opportunities and training for the future."

Gabriel Brothers operates 100 stores through its Gabriel Brothers and Rugged Wearhouse chains in 11 states, employing 3,200 associates. The privately owned company is headquartered in Morgantown.

Immigration law supporters gather for rally at Ariz. Capitol

Associated Press

PHOENIX — Hundreds of people supporting Arizona's new law cracking down on illegal immigration gathered near the state Capitol on Saturday afternoon as temperatures reached 105 degrees.

The Pennsylvania-based group Voice of the People USA organized the demonstration, which it touted as a grassroots effort. Attendees traveled from every region of the U.S., Voice of the People president Daniel Smeriglio said.

Hundreds of motorcycle riders kicked off the downtown Phoenix rally by riding in a procession around the Capitol. Supporters waved American flags and some carried signs that read "What part of illegal don't they understand?"

The rally follows dueling events last weekend that drew thousands of opponents and supporters of the law to the area.

But this weekend's demonstration could be muted by hot weather. The National Weather Service has predicted that temperatures will reach 107 degrees on Saturday.

Smeriglio said his group planned to provide lots of water, and participants have been urged to bring umbrellas and wear sunscreen.

Former Republican Congressman Tom Tancredo, of Colorado, Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio and GOP state Sen. Russell Pearce, of Mesa, were scheduled to speak later Saturday. Pearce is the author of the law that goes into effect July 29 unless blocked by a court, as requested under pending legal challenges.

The law requires that police conducting traffic stops or questioning people about possible legal violations ask them about their immigration status if there is "reasonable suspicion" that they're in the country illegally. Reasonable suspicion is not defined.

The law also makes it a state crime to be in the country illegally or to impede traffic while hiring day laborers, regardless of the worker's immigration status. It would become a crime for illegal immigrants to solicit work.

Critics have said the law will invite racial profiling, while supporters have said it will help fight illegal immigration.

Associated Press

SEATTLE — An avalanche on Mount Rainier sent a mass of snow cascading down a slope early Saturday, burying at least four people, a national park spokeswoman said, and at least one climber remained missing more than 12 hours later.

A search was under way on Mount Rainier, some 60 miles east of Seattle, for the missing climber and a skier reported in the area who may also have been missing, said Mount Rainier National Park spokeswoman Patti Wold.

At about 4:45 a.m. Saturday, several climbing teams were overtaken by the slab avalanche that occurred at 12,500-foot level when a large plate of snow broke away from the mountain.

The avalanche was several thousand feet wide and ran about 1,200 feet down the Ingraham Direct Route.

A helicopter from the U.S. Army Reserve out of Fort Lewis airlifted two injured climbers and six rescuers from the upper mountain Saturday afternoon. Wold said those two climbers were flown to an area hospital.

In-law friendship puts strain on family

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are writing about our only daughter, "Jessica," who has been married to "Ron" for three years. Jessica recently expressed displeasure (initiated by Ron) about how close we are with Ron's parents. They feel our friendship is somehow unusual or threatening. The in-laws are aware of it and don't intend to change their relationship with us.
 From the time that Jessica began dating Ron, my husband and I formed a lovely and close bond with these people. We include each other at family and holiday gatherings. We're baffled, hurt and resent being told to back off from a relationship we cherish. What do you think about this, Abby? — BAFFLED IN VIRGINIA
DEAR BAFFLED: Ron may not have as close a relationship with his parents as you do with your daughter. By including them at every family and holiday gathering, you may be forcing more contact than Ron and Jessica would like. So my advice is — at least for a while — that you continue to socialize with these people as friends but curtail some of those family activities. See "the kids" alone sometimes, and you may learn the reason they feel the way they do.

JEANNE PHILLIPS
DEAR ABBY: I have enjoyed the "pennies from heaven" stories you print. I have wanted to tell you my story for a while.
 A few days after my mother passed away, my husband and I went to dinner at a local restaurant. We usually pay for our dinners with a credit card, but this time we decided to use cash. Our change was a few dollars and a penny.
 For some reason, I decided to check the date on the penny. It was dated 1922, the year of my mother's birth. I am in my 50s and had never found such an old penny before. Its now among the treasures that my mother left me.
 I don't believe in coincidences, Abby. I really do believe Mother had something to do with the penny we received. I consider it my "penny from heaven."
— SEATTLE READER
DEAR READER: A penny as proof of a mother's love? I wouldn't be surprised.

How candidates spent funds

Losers must find place for remaining cash

ELECTION 2010

BY DAVID BEARD

The Dominion Post

While Rep. Alan Mollohan and former state Sen. Sarah Minear outspent their respective opponents in the May primary, neither captured their party's nomination.

Meanwhile, all but one of the unsuccessful 1st District congressional candidates shared with The Dominion Post what they plan to do with leftover campaign funds — if they have any.

As of April 21, Mollohan, the Democratic incumbent, raised $796,242 and spent $612,243, according to the Federal Election Commission (FEC). Challenger Mike Oliverio, the state senator from Morgantown who won the nomination, raised and spent less than half those amounts — $320,365 and $250,624, respectively.

Oliverio garnered 36,134 votes compared to Mollohan's 28,500, according to the West Virginia secretary of state's office.

The full campaign fund amounts aren't available yet, as the FEC figures don't include the final two weeks of the primary race. Reports for April 22-June 30 aren't due to the FEC until July 15.

On the Republican side, Minear raised $523,558 by April 21 — $502,000 of that was her own money — and spent $425,569.

Coming closest to her in funds was David McKinley, of Wheeling, a former delegate and state party chairman. He had raised $453,986 and spent $252,828.

Church celebrates 150 years

Three years before West Virginia became a state, Calvary United Methodist Church opened.

The church and the Cheat Lake community commemorated the church's 150th anniversary Saturday. There was food, face painting and fun for residents to enjoy as they celebrated the church that opened in 1860.

"This church is just great," said Sue Horton, as she made funnel cakes.

Horton started attending the church as a child before she left for a while. She returned in the mid-1980s and still attends.

One of the best parts of the church is that it has a community feel, Horton said. If someone is sick or needs help, people are there.

Fellow church member Linda

Kennison agreed and said if anybody needs help in the community the church is there. They have brought food to those who are sick or grieving. They also sent money to Haiti.

The church community is very welcoming, Kennison said.

"It's friendly," she said. "Everyone knows everyone."

Sue Horton's husband, Dick Horton, said the church community is very close and described it as a big home.

"It's more like family," Dick Horton said.

The church on Fairchance Road usually averages around 35 to 40 people per service, Dick Horton said. But he has seen that number increase from time to time at the church pastored by the Rev. Julia Neal.

Over the years, they have done a lot of repairs to the 150-year-old building, Dick Horton said. They replaced the pews and added a new vestibule, Sunday school rooms and a multipurpose building behind the church.

The celebration didn't end Saturday, though. Today, there will be a service at 9:45 a.m. followed by a covered-dish dinner and a program featuring talents from those in the community.

Principal bids adieu to PHS

Wants to portray Gen. Jackson during retirement

BY MICHELLE WOLFORD

The Dominion Post

KINGWOOD — Doug Riley retires this week as principal of Preston High School.

Now he wants to be a general. The 60-year-old, who began his teaching career in history, may be reenacting history in his retirement.

In August, he'll audition with the West Virginia Humanities Council to portray Gen. Stonewall Jackson as part of its History Alive program. To get the two-year stint, he'll have to do his homework, but he is OK with that.

"I've always admired Jackson," he said.

If that role works out, Riley said he'll try to convince the Council to let him reprise the Mark Twain role he began with a PHS production of "Big River."

But there's more in store for the retiring administrator than role-playing. Riley said being principal took a lot of time from his leisure activities.

"I have not bow-hunted in five years. I have not done any fishing in five years," he said. "I've done limited travel in five years."

In retirement, Riley hopes to make up for lost time — he'll travel to San Francisco this month to visit his son.

And then there's the farm. "I have a small farm and with my neighbors, we've put two together. But for the past five years, I haven't done any farming," he said. "It's time to go back and restock."

Riley's father passed away this year. One reason he's retiring, he said, is "to make sure [his mother] gets to her appointments and take better care of her."

Mike Teets, assistant superintendent of Preston County Schools, said Riley's dedication to students and staff can't be questioned.

"He's always been an active leader from his days as a classroom teacher, his military service and years in administration," he said.

Teets recalled a time when a person who was to sing the National Anthem at a basketball tournament did not arrive.

"Doug picked up the microphone and sang the 'Star Spangled Banner' and did a fine job," he said.

Riley pointed to highlights of his five years at Preston High.

"You can start with this graduating class," he said. "They were awarded almost $1.5 million in scholarships. People lose sight of how great an institution this is.

"It's often overshadowed by the schools' consolidation and the state takeover."

Also on Riley's bragging list:

■ Siemens AP School of the Year two years ago

■ Siemens AP Teacher of the Year this year — PHS's Jeanne LeMasters

■ Ford/AAA Auto Skills Program state winners twice in five years

■ FFA program the best in Region VI last year

■ Athletic, as well as, academic successes

Riley said he's enjoyed his time as principal at Preston High, but it's time to retire.

"I'm looking forward to it," he said. "I'll be 61 in December and pounding this concrete 16 hours a day is taking its toll on my knees. And I had triple bypass surgery in 2002. My stamina is starting to fade.

"In this job, you've got to be able to handle and keep in the air 10-12 things at once. You need someone with energy to keep up the job demands," Riley said.

Bruce Huggins, who teaches drivers' education at PHS, has worked with Riley for 25 years.

Huggins recalled a time when he and Riley took students to Charleston for a Youth in Government event.

"The Senate was talking about changing girls' basketball from fall to winter. And Doug had coached junior high girls' basketball," he said. "He signed up to speak and they called him up. The kids got to watch one of their own teachers testify in front of the Senate."

Riley's retirement, Huggins said, "is a loss for our kids because he cares about them. He works tremendously hard and he's here for the kids. He's contributed greatly to our schools and our kids."

"My first love was being in the classroom," Riley said. "I love being in daily contact with kids. I just [didn't] get to spend the time with the kids as principal."

Riley said he'll spend some of his leisure time doing woodworking.

"You start with a blank piece and it is instant gratification for what you've done," he said. "It's the exact opposite of administration."

Two residents struck by lightning

BY ALEX LANG
The Dominion Post

Two people were taken via ambulance to the hospital after lightning struck them during Saturday's storms.

The incident occurred at about 7 p.m. on Jordan Lane off of Blue Horizon Drive.

According to police radio traffic, a juvenile male and adult female were struck. Both were alive after the strike.

The storm caused severe thunderstorm watches and warnings, as well as a tornado warning to go in effect.

A few alarms went off because of the storms, according to MECCA 911 operators. They also received one call of a tree down on a power line.

There were calls of a structure fire at the Beechurst Power Plant and a transformer fire on Grant Avenue. But both turned out to be false alarms.

Morgantown Fire Capt. Mark Caravaso said they had a real burst of action for about 20 to 30 minutes. The department had enough people on hand to handle all the calls.

The amount of calls was pretty typical for that type of storm, Caravaso said.

Today's forecast calls for more showers and thunderstorms in the morning, said AccuWeather Meteorologist Erik Pindrock. The thunderstorms could create strong wind gusts, but should remain below severe criteria.

Around midday, a front should move through the area and it should be breezy and partly cloudy in the afternoon, Pindrock said. High temperatures should be in the upper 70s.

Amnesty day yields roughly 3,500 tires, officials say

BY ALEX LANG
The Dominion Post

About 3,500 tires were dropped off Saturday at the annual tire amnesty day, hosted by the Monongalia County Solid Waste Authority and the West Virginia Department of Environmental Protection (DEP).
"I just think it's a great thing," said Cheat Lake resident Fred Horton.

Horton brought six tires to the event. He said he took them off two cars about a year ago. They weren't in bad condition, so he thought he would reuse them. After a year, they were still sitting around, so he brought them in for disposal.

The event eliminates any excuse people might have for dumping their tires on the side of the road, Horton said. The day gives them a responsible way to dispose of the rubber wheels.

A steady stream of trucks with beds full of tires and cars with the backseat filled with wheels came to the annual event. Roughly 300 people brought tires to the event. Mon County Litter Officer Fritz Coffindaffer, of Tire and Rubber Inc., unloads tires from the back of a pickup truck during tire amnesty day.

Jason DeProspero/
The Dominion Post

Anthony Giambrone said when people bring tires to these types of drop offs, it saves his department work. "The big thing is so we don't find them on the road," Giambrone said.

Since April, the solid waste authority has collected about 400 tires from the roads, Giambrone said. Normally it costs about $1.25 to dispose of a tire, Giambrone said. But people could bring them to the event for no charge. The tires were taken away by Tire & Rubber Inc., which will recycle them.

If tires are left outside, they can collect water, which makes them a breeding ground for insects, Giambrone said.

DEP Environmental Resource Specialist II Chuck Joseph said tires can be an area where insect-borne diseases can start. But the tires have a large impact somewhere else.

"The biggest environmental impact is aesthetic," Joseph said.

A pile of five or six tires probably isn't a big health risk, Joseph said. But they definitely are an aesthetic problem.

Joseph oversees 17 counties and said each one has a tire amnesty day once a year. The amnesty days have helped decrease the number of tires disposed of improperly, Joseph said. The event gives people a place to turn in their tires, so they are less likely to toss them where they don't belong.

Morgantown businessman Mac Warner ranked second in the number of votes for the GOP race, third in fundraising. By April 21, he raised $165,736 and spent $148,059. He tallied 11,353 votes.

The three other GOP candidates didn't reach the six-figure mark in their fundraising.

Tom Stark, of Parkersburg, raised $11,723 and spent $9,699, tallying 3,636 votes.

Patty Levenson, of Wheeling, raised $29,581, spent $22,855 and won 2,110 votes.

Cindy Hall, also of Wheeling, did not raise the minimum amount required to report to the FEC — $5,000. She tallied 1,533 votes.

A similar picture emerged in the Pennsylvania senatorial race, where challenger Joseph Sestak defeated incumbent Arlen Specter in the Democratic primary.

By April 28, Sestak raised $6,110,778 and spent $3,192,109. Specter raised $7,516,099 and spent $7,482,537.

Troy Berman, executive director of the West Virginia Republican Party, said that the financial commitment for candidates "is certainly substantial compared to years past. Communicating your message — what that message is, is very expensive."

A candidate who doesn't plan to run again may use the money to retire campaign debts. In certain cases, the funds can be donated to another candidate or candidates.

Minear, McKinley and others had more than enough funding to communicate their message, and the Republican voters "responded to the concrete conservative message," ultimately choosing McKinley.

He had no explanation for why Minear's message didn't resonate in the same way. "You'd have to ask the electorate."

West Virginia State Democratic Party Executive Director Derek Scarbro said he preferred to wait until the final two weeks of numbers are in before commenting. He did say that Oliverio "raised enough to get his message out without a doubt," and is poised to continue into the general election.

WVU political science assistant professor Neil Berch said the issue isn't how much a candidate spends, but if the candidate spent enough to be viable. Incumbents are generally in a position to raise as much as they need; challengers have to raise and spend enough to get known.

In the Oliverio-Mollohan race, he said, Oliverio did just that — he spent less, but got his name out there. Mollohan, on the other hand, was already known. His negative campaigning may have worked against him by making him appear to be a "meaney," Berch said.

The leftover money

Federal law dictates what candidates can do with leftover campaign funds. FEC report forms show whether gifts are designated for the primary, the general election or "other."

Designated contributions count toward that specific election. Undesignated gifts can count toward contribution limits for the next run for office. A candidate who loses the primary, but intends another run, can keep the money.

A candidate who doesn't plan to run again may use the money to retire campaign debts.

In certain cases, the funds can be donated to another candidate or candidates.

"Otherwise," the FEC campaign guide says, "the [candidate's] committee must return or refund the contribution."

The exact cash-on-hand figures for the candidates won't be available until July, but most candidates replied, via e-mail, to The Dominion Post's question.

Neither Mollohan's office nor his primary campaign spokeswoman responded to requests for comment.

Hall said she raised less than $5,000 and "there is no money remaining."

Warner said his treasurer is working on zeroing out the books, and he has nothing left.

Stark said, "There is less than $10 in my account at this point. I will request permission from the FEC to donate it to my church. I doubt that the amount in question could be prorated accurately enough to return it and it is not significant enough to do another candidate any good. At least I know my church will use it well."

Levenson said, "I am planning to use contribution to apply toward debt. Whether or not I will run for future office has still not been determined."

And Minear said, "Any money I have left in my account will be used to pay back myself."

Frances loves to quilt and during her lifetime presented many beautiful quilts as gifts to her family (I am guessing over 50). She received great joy by presenting her quilts as wedding gifts to members of her family. # Cap collects some oil even as slick taints beaches

Associated Press

PENSACOLA BEACH, Fla. — Beachgoers gawked at tar balls, discolored seashells and orange foam that washed up on the Gulf Coast's once-pristine white sand shores Saturday the crude from a busted oil well deep underwater appearing in greater quantities and farther east.

A cap over the gusher was believed to be collecting anywhere from about a quarter to half of the leaking oil, even as the slick stained beaches with a waxy mess that nonetheless appeared to deter few tourists — and attracted the curious.

An aerial tour of the Alabama coast revealed long red tendrils extending into the green water off Gulf Shores, Ala., where oil from beachgoers' feet spotted boardwalks and some condominiums provided solvents for guests smeared with the brown goo. A reddish streak miles long marked the surf line in front of high-rise condominiums.

"I feel like I've gone from owning a piece of paradise to owning a toxic waste dump," said Erin Tamber, who resettled in the Pensacola area after surviving Hurricane Katrina in New Orleans.

Six weeks after an April 20 oil rig explosion killed 11 workers, oil giant BP PLC has failed to significantly stem the worst spill in U.S. history. The government's point man for the crisis, Coast Guard Adm. Thad Allen, said at a news briefing Saturday that the cap collected about 252,000 gallons of oil Friday, its first full day of use.

That amount is about a half-percent to 1 percent of the total oil that, according to government estimates, has already leaked

BP CEO repeats promise to pay 'legitimate' oil spill claims

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — BP PLC has repeated its promise to pay all "legitimate" claims resulting from the oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico after a warning from President Barack Obama.

CEO Tony Hayward wrote Saturday on a company Twitter account that the firm has been committed since the start of the oil spill to paying all legitimate financial claims.

Hayward did not explain what prompted his online posting. But on Friday, Obama said during a trip to Louisiana that he didn't want BP "nickel-and-dime people." The president said the federal government would make sure that BP paid the claims.

The company estimated this week that it would spend about $84 million through June to compensate for lost wages and profits caused by the oil spill.

The device resembles an upside-down funnel and was lowered over the blown-out well a mile beneath the sea to try to capture most of the oil and direct it to a ship on the surface. BP officials are trying to strike a delicate balance by capturing as much oil as possible without creating too much pressure or allowing the build-up of a slushy mixture that can clog pipes and thwarted an earlier containment effort.

Obama picks intelligence chief

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — He's the right guy to preside America's intelligence operations. Or he's a good guy, but the wrong one for that tough job.

Those warring opinions emerged about James R. Clapper after President Barack Obama said Saturday he wants the Pentagon's current intelligence chief to serve as director of national intelligence — the fourth since the post was created in 2004 — and wants the Senate to confirm him quickly.

"Eminently qualified," Obama described the blunt-spoken retired Air Force lieutenant general, offering his "complete confidence and support."

Those who know Clapper, 69, and have worked with him during his long career in public service say he's never shied away from a fight. That's just what he may get from senators who will decide whether to put him in a job that comes with an unforgiving mandate, as explained by Obama: Ensuring the 16 spy agencies work "as one integrated team that produces quality, timely and accurate intelligence. Let's be honest — this is a tough task."

A preview of the Capitol Hill obstacles? "He's a good guy, but the wrong guy," said the top Republican on the Senate Intelligence Committee, Sen. Kit Bond of Missouri.

It's a thankless job that has challenged the first three directors. Many intelligence and administrative experts believe the role was ill-conceived when it was set up as part of the post-Sept. 11 reforms in 2004.

Clapper would succeed retired Adm. Dennis Blair, who resigned after frequent clashes with the White House and other intelligence officials. Clapper has held the Pentagon intelligence job longer than expected, at the request of Defense Secretary Robert Gates.

A Vietnam veteran, Clapper once directed the Defense Intelligence Agency, which often works closely with the CIA.

Gates likes Clapper, defense officials said, because he's known as always respectful, but always direct.

Errant tarp traps six Amtrak trains

NEW LONDON, Conn. — Amtrak trains between

Boston and New York were delayed up to three hours after a tarp got caught up in overhead train wires in Groton, Conn.

Amtrak spokeswoman Vernae Graham said six trains were delayed Saturday. She said train services resumed around 3 p.m.

Possible violations found at blast site

COLEBROOK, N.H. — Court documents indicate that explosives may have been stored or manufactured improperly or mishandled at a New Hampshire gun and ammunition plant where an explosion killed two men last month.

The Caledonian-Record reports the state fire marshal's office received two search warrants for the MDM Muzzleloader plant in Colebrook, where another man was injured in the May 14 blast.

Documents show that an interview with an electrician pointed to a potential wiring issue in one of the buildings.

Sub attack was near U.S.-S. Korea drill

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — On the night a torpedo-armed North Korean submarine allegedly sank a South Korean patrol ship, the U.S. and South Korea were engaged in joint anti-submarine warfare exercises just 75 miles away, military officials told The Associated Press.

The sinking of the Cheonan was the worst South Korean military disaster since the 1950-'53 Korean War. It showed that even impoverished nations such as North Korea can inflict heavy casualties on far better equipped and trained forces, including those backed by U.S. military might.

Defense Secretary Robert Gates said plans for more joint U.S.-South Korea anti-submarine exercises, announced after Cheonan went down, are on hold awaiting U.N. action on the incident.

That's in part, Gates said Friday, while in Asia, because of concerns about instigating another rash act by the North Koreans.

Two months after the sinking, U.S. officials for the first time disclosed details of the joint naval exercise held the same day as the attack on the Cheonan. Forty-six South Korean sailors died on the warship, which was not involved in the exercise. It was on routine patrol.

Iraqi candidate backed by Sunnis killed

Associated Press

BAGHDAD — Gunmen killed a third candidate from the Sunni-backed coalition that won the most seats in Iraq's March parliamentary election, a slaying the alliance said Saturday was part of a politically motivated campaign of assassinations.

Paris Jassim al-Jubouri's attackers came to his home outside Mosul in the middle of the night dressed in army uniforms, according to brother Marwan Jassim, a police officer who was there at the time.

He said they demanded details about al-Jubouri, then found him sleeping on the roof to escape the heat, shot him three times and fled.

Police and morgue officials confirmed the killing. Al-Jubouri had run on the secularist Iraqiya list.

"This killing is part of a series of assassinations targeting members of the Iraqiya list, definitely for political reasons," said party spokeswoman Maysoun Damlouji. "The Iraqiya list does not want to escalate the situation, but we won't sit silent over the killing of any Iraqi."

Will textbook rental options save money?

MANY WVU STUDENTS are all familiar with the plethora of offers from competing textbook stores, ranging from claims of getting more money back for books to free shot glasses.

The campus bookstore seems to have a competitive leg up on the game, however. This fall, the book store will offer a textbook rental option to students.

The question is, how much are students going to really save?

"Students can now save over 50 percent compared to new book purchases," said Karen Discala, manager of corporate communications for Barnes and Noble university book stores, which operates WVU's campus bookstores. "At our other branches of university book stores, there was a tremendous response."

Renting textbooks is similar to purchasing used or new books. Students can make the transaction in person or online. Financial aid, debit and credit cards, and cash are all accepted. The return policy is the same as purchased book returns if a student decides to drop the class.

Students can write and highlight in rental books just as they can in purchased books.

Students are obligated to return rentals within 10 days of their last final in "useable" condition. Students also have the option of purchasing rentals within the first two weeks of class.

Many students like to keep books, however.

"Sometimes I like keeping books and using them in other classes, but it's not always financially possible," said Shannon Goudy, a sophomore Spanish and French major.

Is two weeks an adequate amount of time to decide whether or not a book is worth purchasing and if it can be used as a future reference?

Justin Hayhurst, a junior biology major, was wary.

"I tend to not trust the university book store," he said. "This rental idea sounds really good, but I will have to see it in effect first. It may seem like you're saving money when you really aren't."

After receiving less than a third of what I originally paid for books on return my freshman year — having spent more than $200 for a single book — I find it difficult to view the option without skepticism. A university bookstore employee even told me that the store was a gouge to students.

Saving more than 50 percent sounds great, but that is compared to actually purchasing the new book. The flyers don't compare savings to the purchase of used books. And many students don't purchase books for a class if they can pass without them.

This maneuver seems to be more a masked attempt to branch out to this untapped market instead of a true response to the demand for lower prices.

If competing book stores decide to implement the policy as well, will the transaction save students money, or become meaningless like so many of their other "money saving" options?

Africa opens student eyes

Course teaches business side of philanthropy

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Mac Festa is definitely going back to South Africa.

When he began his senior semester at WVU's College of Business and Economics, involvement in the problem of HIV/AIDS in Africa was not on his radar screen. But that changed during his final spring break as an undergraduate.

The finance senior from Ohiopyle, Pa. joined three other business students in an unconventional capstone honors course. In April, they spent a week in South Africa visiting agencies on the front lines in the battle against the disease — agencies that help people who, already burdened with poverty, have often been dealt a death sentence. The students' mission was to bring their business knowledge to the agencies.

On the last evening of their experience, writing on a blog the students established to chronicle their trip, Festa already knew he wanted to return.

"So, as we all pack for the return trip home, I cannot help but think when I will have the opportunity to come back," he wrote. "Right now, we are working on completing a paper on micro-lending. It has been accepted for presentation at a conference in Ireland in June. If everything goes according to plan, we will be able to take the model presented in the paper and apply it in August in Malawi."

The course grew out of a book their professor wrote. Presha Neidermeyer, associate professor of accounting, led several student trips to Africa while employed as a faculty member at Union Graduate College, her former institution. The experience left her with a strong desire to act as a conduit to involve students in this area of philanthropy; thus the WVU course, which, in part, led to her being recognized for public service with the President's Volunteer Service Award in February.

"Since we have medications that can — for a period of time — effectively manage the disease, HIV/AIDS does not have the deadly connotation it did when it was first reported," said Neidermeyer, who teaches international accounting. "I think this makes people a lot less concerned than they should be about the disease, which still has neither cure nor preventative measure, such as a vaccine for those not infected. AIDS is the greatest crisis facing the human race this century."

Neidermeyer's book defines the disease and explores its history, but its main point is what it will take to defeat it. The authors suggest that the AIDS epidemic will not be quelled by financial aid alone.

She and her co-author, Roger W. Hoerl, of GE Global Research and Development in New York, believe the AIDS crisis can be surmounted, and the title of their book, "Use What You Have," points to the solution.

The title is a quote from Jolly Nyeko, founder of Action for Children in Uganda, who was kidnapped at age 15 and held captive for five days before she escaped. She returned home, finished her education, became a social worker and began to see the issues of HIV/AIDS firsthand. With her only resources being a phone and a desire to help, she advertised that she might not be able to do anything but listen, but she could do at least that. Out of that one phone has grown a large organization designed to serve children throughout Uganda, offering programs ranging from AIDS education to micro-loans and assistance to 250 former kidnapped child brides and their offspring.

Writing in the blog, Festa explored how the trip to Africa had affected all four students.

"The experience is something I will never forget. The people listed on these posts are all making a difference in a country that has seen its fair share of downswings," he wrote.

"Over dinner tonight we began discussing the biggest question we will face as we return to our 'normal' lives on Monday. 'How has this experience affected you?' The answer is too big to write here. I could go on at length about how my life will be different. It would take no effort at all to write an 80-page paper on the experience. The only thing I can say is the following: Words, pictures and interviews will never display the experience South Africa has given to me. To understand what this country is truly like you must see it for yourself."

Students study media's role in West Africa

Submitted to The Dominion Post

WVU journalism professor Steve Urbanski said something about Africa "gets into your soul."

"That's the best way to put it," Urbanski said. "When I leave — as soon as the plane lifts off, I start missing it [Africa] passionately."

Urbanski, the director of graduate studies and assistant professor at the WVU P.I. Reed School of Journalism, is sharing his passion with eight journalism students this summer.

The study abroad trip, including graduate and undergraduate students, is examining media in West Africa — a topic with which Urbanski is familiar. The dissertation he wrote in 2003 focused on the resilient, dissident print media of Benin and how it informed the concept of freedom through the republic's history.

"Benin has only been a democracy since around 1990," he said. "Prior to that, it was a Marxist regime for 17 years. The one constant was a resilient press that kept the people informed."

During the Spring 2010 semester, Urbanski taught a special topics course, International Media: West Africa. Throughout the semester, students studied the media practices, culture and history of West Africa, particularly Ghana, Benin and Burkina Faso. This summer, they'll have the chance to take what they learned in the classroom and apply it in the field.

Erin Graziani, a public relations senior and Morgantown native, is part of the group traveling to Africa. She said the opportunity to study abroad is invaluable.

"How many times do you get to go to Africa?" she said. "Combine that with the fact that I'll be learning more about journalism and international media. The knowledge I gain over there will help me if I ever want to work in a PR firm with international offices."

This is Graziani's second study abroad trip this year. She traveled to Jordan and Dubai, India, for spring break, and said experiencing other cultures promotes understanding both abroad and within the university community. "We have many international students here," she said. "It [travel abroad] helps us to understand where they are coming from a little more because we are in their place when we travel abroad."

The group left Monday and will spend nearly three weeks visiting media outlets in Accra, Ghana, and Cotonou, Benin; touring the University of Ghana; and taking several sightseeing expeditions.

Students will blog about their experiences before returning June 19. Follow their adventure at westafricasoj.wvu.edu/.

Beatty: Prospects not worried about conference chaos

LET'S SEE HERE. In the past couple weeks alone, rumors have spread like wildfire mentioning everything from Bob Huggins as a potential candidate for WVU's athletic director position to the Mountaineers landing in the SEC once all the smoke from this conference realignment mess clears.

Wait, maybe that was the ACC, or Conference USA, or did you hear the one that WVU might start a new conference? Or try life as an independent?

The whole thing can become maddening if you let it, or you can simply shrug your shoulders and accept the undeniable truth that sports have and always will be as much about rumors as are the games that are actually played in fields, stadiums and arenas.

(On a side note, the WVU men's basketball coach responded to a question regarding the A.D. position by saying, "I don't want to comment on it because there's nothing to say." Take that as you will.)

Anyway, rarely does a day go by that I, you, your sister and father don't hear a new rumor regarding this conference shuffle. There's so much speculation and guessing — Will the Big 12 crumble away? Will the Big Ten win over Texas? Might the Pac-10 soon become the Pac-16? How exactly is the Big East being proactive? Knowing the SEC has something up its sleeve — and the reports change as often as the sun sets in the west.

Recently, WVU's football coaches have been scanning the country for high school athletes they hope to sign in February. And you'd imagine recruits' minds are overwhelmed with all this uncertainty. How can you possibly make a decision on where to play college ball when you don't know which conference a school may be in (or even how many conferences there will be) by the time you enroll?

"Nobody has asked me about any of that stuff," WVU recruiting coordinator Chris Beatty said. "I've had high school coaches ask, but no players."

Really? That's got to be surprising, right?

"Not at all. Having been a high school coach before and knowing what players think, they don't care," Beatty said. "They want to play on a big stage and produce on a big stage. They look at it and say, 'West Virginia is on the big stage and that's not about to change.' Kids just want to play, they want to get coached and play in big bowls. I don't think that's going to change."

From Beatty's perspective, elite players don't care as much about conference ties as ESPN cameras. They want to play on TV, and they want to have a chance to move on to the NFL.

If or when conference talk comes up during recruiting trips, Beatty isn't alarmed. Certainly, he's a supporter of the Big East, and although no one knows what will happen, he's not about to believe WVU's prestige will take a hit when all is said and done.

"I am pretty sure Oklahoma and Texas aren't too worried about conference realignment because they are premier programs," Beatty said. "And I feel like we're not too far behind, if at all, because West Virginia is a premier program. Kids want to play on the big stage, and we've been on the big stage as long as I've been alive and a lot longer than that. I am not really concerned."

As for recruiting efforts, Beatty says WVU is taking a methodical approach in considering all factors before any commitments are made. At this point, WVU doesn't have any verbal commitments, but there's no need to be alarmed. It's a marathon, not a sprint, Beatty insists.

"We have several guys we feel comfortable want to be part of our program," he said.

Tough opener for Post 2 today

Steubenville often the best team in Ohio

BY ERIC HANLON
The Dominion Post

It's opening day. The Morgantown Post 2 American Legion baseball team begins its season at 5 p.m. today, when it welcomes Steubenville, Ohio, at Hawley Field, for a doubleheader.

Right off the bat, Steubenville presents a difficult challenge for Post 2.

206-48. During that same time, Post 2 is 10-10 against Steubenville.

"We're like 175 games over .500 [overall] and .500 against them, so that should tell you something," Galusky said. "They are the premier team in Ohio. We usually split with them, but it's always a good test for us to see where we're at."

Typically, the two teams are considered equals. In fact, considering the success each has had in recent years, Morgantown and Steubenville have been nearly mirror images of one another.

"They're just like us, only in Ohio," Post 2 pitcher Cole Mertins said. "They've won state titles in three of the last six years and we've won state titles in three of the last six years."

"They've got a lot of good baseball players, so it's always a good game against them."

As even as they have been in the past, a split would be a very positive sign for Post 2 this time around. Reason being, Steubenville now draws players from an even larger area as it recently combined with two other legion programs.

"It would be like if we combined with Fairmont and Bridgeport," Galusky said. "So, we're expecting them to be better than ever."

When asked what he expects his opening day opponent's strength to be, Galusky tensed up.

"Everything," Galusky said. "Usually both of their starters are college guys and four or five guys in their lineup are college guys. I'd guess they do everything really well."

Galusky recalls a time when Post 2 played Steubenville and the crowd was filled with college scouts, there to see shortstop Zach Collaros, who now quarterbackes the University of Cincinnati football team.

Then again, for every Collaros Steubenville has produced through the years, Post 2 has had a Jedd Gyorko. Gyorko, who just wrapped up his WVU career, was in that same Post 2 game against Collaros years ago.

With 12 state titles in its pocket, Post 2 has nothing but confidence entering today's game.

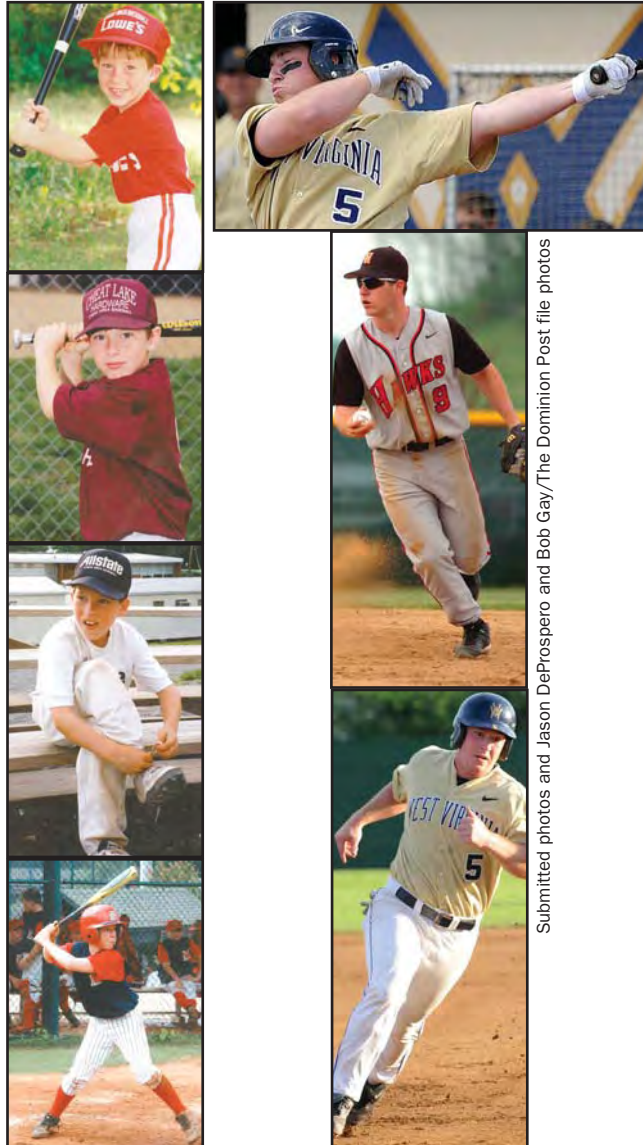

"Hopefully, we'll win both of them," Mertins said. "I'm looking forward to getting two wins and having something to build on for the rest of the year."

FB Jackson hoping he'll make grade in NFL too

If not, ex-UHS star has earned degree

BY DREW RUBENSTEIN
The Dominion Post

Try as he might, Cory Jackson couldn't devote his entire life to football between the end of his senior season at Maryland and April's NFL draft.

Unlike many other athletes preparing for the jump from college to NFL, Jackson remained a student at Maryland as he traveled to Atlanta and worked to stay in shape for the Senior Bowl, Pro Day and other pro workouts. This spring, he had one class, which he was able to take off campus, separating him from a degree in general communications.

That close, he knew he had to finish the job, no matter what.

Recently, Jackson, a former University High star and three-year starting fullback for the Terps, got his final grade.

A-minus. The University of Maryland should soon be mailing that diploma to Jackson, who is now a college graduate with a 3.0-plus cumulative GPA.

"It feels great," said Jackson, who signed with the San Diego Chargers as an undrafted free agent. "I went through enough there that I wanted to walk away with a degree. I did pretty well and never got lower than a 'C.'"

"It was definitely really busy. I was struggling because I had a lot on my mind while trying to stay in shape and moving from one place to another. It's good to have it done. Things are looking good now."

WVU star likely high draft pick

BY TODD MURRAY
The Dominion Post

Randy Gyorko never tires of telling the story about his kid brother Jedd. Neither does middle brother Scott.

It's a tale that's been told and re-told in the Gyorko household with great pleasure through the years.

The story dates to a summer day in 1994, on the Little League fields of Cheat Lake. Randy, 12, and Scott, 10, were practicing with their A-ball team. Jedd, 5, tagged along with his brothers, shagging fly balls in the outfield during batting practice.

Jedd Gyorko

At one point, someone belted a towering shot to center field. Christian Vineyard, one of the team's stars, camped under the ball when ... well, this is where the story takes a humorous twist.

"Jedd actually called for the ball," Randy said, laughing at the memory. "What 5-year-old does that?"

Vineyard stepped aside as Jedd — the future WVU baseball star — held up his glove, waiting for the ball's arrival. It

Here's to Wooden and a life well-lived

COMMENTARY

BY TIM DAHLBERG

HE WAS A COACH WHEN coaching meant something else, long before the job became a pathway to riches and fame.

A coach when student-athletes were really students, and the thought of making millions of dollars rolling out basketballs in the gym seemed preposterous.

A coach when it meant more to mold the lives of young men than to proclaim his own greatness.

A coach who offered a new life lesson to his charges almost every day.

"Learn as if you were going to live forever," he would tell his players. "Live as if you were going to die tomorrow."

John Wooden didn't live forever. His "tomorrow" finally came Friday, when he quietly passed away just months before his 100th birthday.

The end came, fittingly enough, on the same UCLA campus where he tutored a player then known as Lew Alcindor. The same place he seemingly couldn't lose with Bill Walton.

The place where he dispensed wisdom that his players remembered long after they had forgotten the X's and O's.

"What you are as a person is far more important than what you are as a basketball player," he would say.

His players listened. How could they not when the man giving advice lived by the same code?

He was born on a farm in Indiana without running water or electricity, and his values were as solid as the land his parents worked. He lived into a time he could never have imagined, but nothing changed.

The championships seemed to come as an annual rite of spring. There were 10 of them in all, an accomplishment so staggering that no other college coach will ever come close.

The other statistics blurred together over time, but they won't be matched either. Still, it wasn't the 88-game winning streak, four 30-0 seasons or even the 38 straight NCAA tournament wins that defined the humble Midwesterner who ended up at UCLA almost by accident.

He had the best players. They came because of him, and they came in spite of him.

Playing for Wooden, you see, was never easy. He was the boss, practices were brutal, and things were always done in his meticulous way.

The players who bought in would one day become his lifetime friends. Those who didn't would never understand.

The first practice of every season began not with a midnight slam dunk contest, but a demonstration by Wooden on the proper way to put on shoes and socks. Wrinkles in the socks could lead to blisters, he explained, and blisters could lead to losing.

The fundamentals never went out of style, and Wooden

JACKSON

"I think he's always placed a high priority on academics," UHS football coach John Kelley added. "I think that's why Stanford offered him [a scholarship]. He was always different. As rugged as he was, he was always well-read. He was constantly reading things way above what the average kid reads. That's why if this somehow doesn't work out, he will have a lot to fall back on. He's going to be successful whether it's in football or whatever it is."

Right now, it's football all the time for Jackson. He reported to San Diego about a month ago. Rookie camp, minicamp, organized team activities and other workouts that will keep him in San Diego until June 25, when he'll get a little time off before preseason camp kicks into full gear.

"It's been good," Jackson said. "I am trying to get caught up to speed on everything."

The Chargers list four full-backs on their roster — Jackson, Jacob Hester, Billy Latsko and Mike Tolbert. When the final roster cuts are announced before San Diego's season opener, in September, Jackson knows all four will not be on the Chargers' 53-man active roster and eight-man practice squad.

"I mean, it's in the back of your mind, but the important thing is just to take care of the small things and do well on the field and prove to the coaches they can rely on you," Jackson said. "Once we get into preseason games [in August], the rookies will get a good bit of time in the second half, and that will be a big evaluation period for us."

Not many NFL teams utilize a true fullback like Jackson (6-foot, 250 pounds) anymore, but San Diego appears to be one. A season ago, the Chargers ranked fifth in the NFL in passing yards per game but second to last in rushing yards.

Jackson senses San Diego wants to improve its rushing attack, which gives him an opportunity to prove what he can do as a true lead blocker.

Kelley calls Jackson the best blocking back he's ever seen, and he is convinced he could offer the Chargers the piece their run game has missed the past couple years.

"I want to show them I am bigger than the other guys and can catch and block and run and do all the other things," Jackson said. "Special teams will be a big part of me making the team too."

Blackhawks try to regroup from losses in Philly

NHL PLAYOFFS

Associated Press

CHICAGO — When they won the first two games of the Stanley Cup finals, the Chicago Blackhawks were soaring. A trip to Philadelphia brought them back to reality in a hurry.

After two wins by the gritty Flyers on their home ice tied the series, the championship round is now a best-of-three.

Before tonight's Game 5, back at the United Center, the Blackhawks know they have to adjust — to the Flyers' speed, to Philly's rugged defense led by veteran Chris Pronger; to their own inability to get scoring from their top players — or risk losing what they've come this far to achieve.

Coach Joel Quenneville is expected to mix some lines, and Chicago's defense hopes to give goalie Antti Niemi more support against a balanced Flyers attack that has shown to be the Blackhawks' equal.

To re-establish themselves, the Blackhawks know they can't repeat their mistakes from Games 3-4. Defenseman Niklas Hjälmarsson's poor puck handling near the net led to a pair of first-period goals by the Flyers en route to a 5-3 victory.

And Chicago was too slow with a line change in Game 3, helping set up Philly's game-winning goal in overtime that produced a 4-3 victory.

Niemi, whose stellar play in the final period of Game 2 preserved a Chicago victory, gave up eight goals in the two games at the Wachovia Center.

"He's played well for us all season. ... We're not worried at all," Chicago's Brent Sopel said Saturday. "We left him high and dry as defensemen."

Philadelphia's Michael Leighton, meanwhile, ran his record to 8-2 with the victory Friday. The former Blackhawk has a .924 save percentage and a 2.14 goals-against average. His defense supported him in Game 4 with 28 blocked shots.

One of the Flyers' big advantages in the series has been on special teams. Chicago's power play is just 1-for-9 after converting a 5-on-3 Friday, while Philadelphia is 5-for-16.

"We know we have to do a better job of staying out of the box," Sopel said. "We got to start taking pucks and bodies to the net."

That's where 257-pound Dustin Byfuglien is supposed to be the force for the Blackhawks. But Chicago's top line of Byfuglien, Jonathan Toews and Patrick Kane have combined for only one goal and four assists in the four games.

Byfuglien, bothered by the constant checking and stick work of Pronger, has not scored a goal and neither has Toews, the NHL's postseason points leader.

Quenneville did some switching late in Game 4. Kane was on a line with Dave Bolland and Kris Versteeg while Byfuglien and Toews were joined by Andrew Ladd.

Kane acknowledged how difficult it is to play against the 6-foot-6, 220-pound Pronger, long one of the NHL's nastiest and most talented defenseman. But he also pointed to the tough defense from Philly's forward for bottling up what had been a prolific first line in the postseason before the finals.

"He's really good with the puck. He's not just strictly defense, so that makes it tough on you when you're out there against him," Kane said of Pronger.

"He's pretty big. He has a big reach. He takes up a lot of time and space, but I'm going to give a lot of credit to the forwards and the way they've been coached as far as how to backcheck and play us in the zone off the top. That seems like where we're struggling a little bit."

NBA PLAYOFFS

Associated Press

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. — Rajon Rondo often enjoys returning to his room at the Celtics' hotel and watching tape of a Boston victory before he goes to sleep.

The losses, not so much.

Yet Rondo did just that after the NBA finals opener Thursday with teammate Kendrick Perkins, ordering room service and watching the replay of the Los Angeles Lakers' decisive win. In his own room elsewhere in the hotel, Kevin Garnett did the same thing — twice.

"You learn a lot about yourself when you lose," Garnett said. "You learn a lot about yourself when you're down. This shows what you're made of."

While Rondo and Perkins muted the television, Garnett turned it up to hear every unflattering thing said about the Celtics. Yet all three came away from the film session with two conclusions: Kobe Bryant is awfully good, but Boston still can compete with the Lakers.

"That might be the first time after a loss that I watched a game again so quickly," Rondo said Saturday, before Boston's workout at the Lakers' training complex. "This isn't the first round any more. You don't have a lot of time to get things right. I think I correct my mistakes better when I see them."

Rondo, Perkins and their teammates all promised increased intensity in every aspect of their considerable games when they look to avoid an 0-2 series hole tonight, in Game 2. After staggering into this finals rematch with an unimpressive effort, Boston hopes focus and adjustments will make the trip west worthwhile.

"Everybody gets punched," Celtics big man Glen Davis said. "Everybody gets knocked out. It's about how you get up. We got punched. We got dazed. It's about how you react to it."

The Celtics all realize that while Bryant's offensive artistry is responsible for most of the attention directed at him, particularly after 12 30-point games already in this postseason, he's a perennial all-defensive team selection for a reason. Rondo used his film session to analyze exactly what Bryant did to slow both the Celtics and their young point guard.

"He's a good defensive player, and we all knew that," Rondo said. "He did a great job on me. A lot of what they do on both ends keys off Kobe."

Bryant guarded Rondo at times during the 2008 finals largely because the matchup left him free to help out on other defensive matchups while daring Rondo to beat them.

Johnson aim: Get on track

Driver stands 7th with Pocono today

NASCAR

Associated Press

LONG POND, Pa. — Jimmie Johnson hears the buzz. It's been kind of hard to avoid during the four-time defending NASCAR champion's recent slide.

A single top-10 in five races.

Two crashes. Some bad racing luck. Driver error. No victories since early spring.

Do the performances fail to meet the impossibly high standard Johnson's Hendrick Motorsports team has set for itself during its record-breaking run? Sure.

Are they proof that the cracks in Johnson's dominance are finally starting to show? Not exactly.

"You read the headlines and it's like the No. 48 team is shutting down," Johnson said.

Hardly. Johnson sits seventh in points heading into today's 500-mile race at Pocono, where he'll start 25th at the massive 2.5-mile oval. Halfway through NASCAR's regular season, it would take a series of major catastrophes for him to miss out on the Chase.

Still, even Johnson admits he's not exactly been at his coolly efficient best of late. "I've always had that good rhythm of walking that tightrope, and you step over it from time to time," he said. "Lately I've been stepping on the wrong side of that line."

He did it twice this past weekend, at Charlotte, where a pair of wrecks sent him retreating to the garage. He gamely headed back to the track after repairs, though the sight of Johnson running a dinged-up car 35 laps behind the leaders at a place where he's won six times bordered on the bizarre.

It was just the latest in a series of mishaps that have taken some of the steam out of Johnson's start, when he won three of the first five races and filled the rest of the series with a sense of "here we go again" dread.

Yet Johnson hasn't been back to Victory Lane since taking the checkered flag at Bristol, on March 21. No biggie for most drivers. A veritable lifetime for Johnson.

He won the pole at Talladega but got caught up in a wreck with six laps to go. Two weeks later, at Darlington, he crashed for his third DNF of the season. Things weren't much better at Dover, where he slogged to 16th. He gambled and lost at the All-Star race. Then he spent this past Sunday getting too friendly with the wall at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Is he distracted? It's kind of hard not to be when you're expecting your first child.

Johnson and wife Chandra will welcome a baby girl in July, and Johnson has done his best to help out at home when he can. Ask him about putting together the nursery and he lights up.

"Lots of pink," he says before struggling — as most expectant fathers do — to describe some of the stuffed animals that decorate the room.

He's got time to learn. And he's got plenty of time to figure things out on the track, too.

Johnson survived a similar lull in 2009, when he managed just one top-10 in six races starting in Watkins Glen and ending in Richmond.

There was the 14-race winless streak in 2007. The forgettable two months in 2006 in which he didn't even crack the top 10.

All of those seasons ended in championships.

WOODEN

never changed his approach.

His players learned, and they grew. He taught them how to win, but he also taught them bigger things, like his belief that a life not lived for others is a life not lived well.

He wouldn't accept less than their best effort both on and off the court, and that's usually what he got.

"Don't measure yourself by what you have accomplished, but what you should have accomplished with your ability," Wooden would warn them.

Walton was one of those with ability, and tons of it. The redhead was one of the greatest college players ever and the bedrock of the UCLA team in the early '70s that won the 88 straight.

Walton was also very much an individual in a time of individualism. One day, during a break in the season, he showed up at practice with a wild, red beard, ready to play for a coach who didn't allow facial hair.

"It's my right," he told Wooden.

"That's good, Bill," Wooden replied. "I admire people who have strong beliefs and stick by them. We're going to miss you."

The beard, of course, went. And although Walton finally graduated and moved on, his friendship with his coach grew by the year.

Walton's hair is now white, and he walks gingerly from back problems. In the bowels at the Staples Center the other night, his voice caught as he talked about visiting Wooden a few days earlier in the hospital.

"He's the greatest," Walton said. "We love him."

It's been 35 years since Wooden watched his Bruins cut down the nets one last time, then walked away while still at his peak. Yes, he was the "Wizard of Westwood" — a nickname he didn't like — but he never made more than $32,500 and for years he mopped the floor himself before practice.

He never begrudged the coaches of today the millions they make, but making money wasn't why he got into coaching in the first place. He became a legend because of what his players did on the court, but to Wooden the victories were merely a byproduct of the life lessons that always came first.

Indeed, Wooden did what he preached, living his life for others. His style was authoritarian, but his players graduated and the messages sank in a lot more than they missed the mark.

He encouraged them to take chances, urged them to be all they could be.

"If you're not making mistakes, then you're not doing anything," he would tell them. "I'm positive that a doer makes mistakes."

Wooden didn't make many. He lived an impeccable life, devoid of scandal, still so in love with his wife, Nell, in the years after she died that he would write her a letter each month just as he had done while she was alive.

As word got out about his final hospitalization, students who hadn't even been born the last time he worked a game rallied on the UCLA campus in tribute.

Words of tribute, meanwhile, began flowing the moment his death was announced.

But the words that matter most are the ones his players still remember. The same words they've passed on to their children and their children's children.

"Don't give up on your dreams, or your dreams will give up on you," he told them.

As hard as it is to imagine, John Wooden is gone.

Schiavone French champ

First Italian woman to win Slam tourney

Associated Press

PARIS — For more than a decade as a professional tennis player, and nearly 30 years as a person, Francesca Schiavone waited and worked to reach this particular moment on this particular court, and there was no way she was going to conceal her excitement about arriving.

As Schiavone moved closer, point by important point, to winning the French Open title, and to giving Italy its first female champion at a Grand Slam tournament, she let everyone watching share in the sheer joy.

At 2-all in the second-set tiebreaker of Saturday's taut final, against Samantha Stosur, of Australia, Schiavone hit a forehand volley winner and raised a fist, well aware she was four points from victory.

Schiavone next smacked a volley to end a nine-stroke exchange and jumped to celebrate. Three points away. A forehand winner followed, and Schiavone screamed. Two points away. She slid through the red clay and, lunging, poked yet another volley winner. She yelled again, hopping in place. One point away.

And then, after delivering a spin-laden backhand from the baseline, Schiavone watched the ball glance off Stosur's racket frame and deflect harmlessly in the wrong direction. Zero points away. The 17th-seeded Schiavone covered her face with both hands, then dropped to the ground and stayed on her back for a few moments, smearing her white outfit with rust-colored clay, relishing the 6-4, 7-6 (2) win against the No. 7-seeded Stosur and the many, little steps that brought her there, right where she always believed she could be.

Schiavone (pronounced Skee-ah-VOH-nay) curled over and kissed the court, giving thanks to "this clay, this beautiful tournament and this arena," as she put it later, for giving her "this opportunity and all the emotion that I am living."

She turns 30 this month, making her the oldest woman since 1969 to win her first Grand Slam championship. On Monday, Schiavone will rise to a career-best No. 6 in the WTA rankings, making her the oldest woman since 1998 to make her top-10 debut.

Consider how far she's come in only 12 months: At the 2009 French Open, Schiavone was ranked 50th and lost in the first round against — you guessed it — Stosur: "When you achieve goals with self-awareness, by working on who you are and what you do every day of your life, you're able to appreciate it much more," she said in Italian. "I finally was ready to win this trophy."

Both she and those around her say the way Schiavone has grown as a person off the court in recent years helps her perform better on the court. She never had been past the quarterfinals at 38 previous major tournaments and had won only three titles anywhere.

"I wasn't like this 10 years ago. They know," she said, nodding toward Italian journalists who have tracked her career. "I decided to express myself, to be free, to be able to share my joy. Why not? When you give, you also can receive. If you remain closed, there's no exchange. I love to exchange. I love to give."

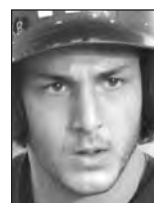

As far as tennis goes, it clearly also helps to have a concrete game plan and follow it perfectly, something Schiavone did against Stosur, who upset current No. 1 Serena Williams and past No. 1s Justine Henin and Jelena Jankovic en route to Saturday.

Team eliminated from NCAA play

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — Garrett Wittels extended his hitting streak to 56 games Saturday, but Florida International was eliminated by Dartmouth with a 15-9 loss in the NCAA Coral Gables regional.

Garrett Wittels

Dartmouth next faces the loser of the game between Texas A&M and Miami.

Wittels hit an RBI double in the top of the first inning, leaving him two games shy of the Division I record, set by Oklahoma State's Robin Ventura, in 1987. Wittels' attempt to break the mark will resume next season.

He went 3-for-5 and finished the season with a .417 average and a school-record 100 hits.

Jason Brooks hit a tie-breaking grand slam in the sixth inning to put Dartmouth ahead, 12-8.

Cole Sulser (8-0) picked up the win in relief, allowing two runs in five innings. Nick Polizanno (4-5) took the loss.

GYORKO

ricocheted off the top of his glove, smacking him in the upper lip and nose.

Jedd fell to the ground, blood oozing from his mouth and nose. Unfazed, he jumped to his feet as the players fought to control their laughter.

"What are you doing?" they asked.

"I called for the ball," Jedd said.

"Everybody looked around and chuckled," Randy said. "It hurt for a little bit, but he kept coming to our practices and kept playing."

Jedd Gyorko wouldn't have it any other way. To this day, he doesn't view a 5-year-old calling off another outfielder as unusual. To him, it's the most natural act in the world.

"I had older brothers who played baseball; my dad was a big baseball fan," Jedd said. "I knew the game from the start. If I was going to play the game, I was going to know the game. [Calling for the ball] was part of the game."

Around that time, Randy and Scott Gyorko knew their little brother had the makings of a great ballplayer.

"We realized with the baseball IQ he had at 5, he was probably going to be a little better than Scott and I were at baseball," Randy said.

Maybe just a little.

Jedd starred at every level of baseball, from T-ball to Little League to high school, and on to the Division I ranks with the Mountaineers.

Nearly 16 years after that fly-ball mishap at Cheat Lake, Jedd is poised to possibly become WVU's first first-round major-league draft choice since pitcher Chris Enochs went 11th overall, to the Oakland Athletics, in 1997.

The MLB draft begins Monday night.

"I'm looking forward to it," Jedd said. "It's going to happen quick. I wish it was here sooner. I'm getting pretty anxious to see what's going to happen."

Playing to win

Jedd Gyorko grew up in an environment that shaped his ultra-competitive personality.

His older brothers were always playing one sport or another around the family's Cheat Lake residence. The Gyorko boys played only one way — to win.

"I hate to lose more than any other person on this planet, especially to my brothers," Jedd said. "That really wasn't an option. I kept playing until I eventually won."

It wasn't easy.

Randy and Scott never let up on their youngest sibling. Scott recalls how the boys used to play a baseball game with tennis balls, using a brick wall as their catcher.

"We were throwing the ball as hard as we could," Scott said. "We didn't have much time to react, but [Jedd] still hit the ball deep into the woods."

Jedd often amused himself by hitting pebbles outside his house from — as he puts it — "sunrise to sunset pretty much every day." He enjoyed all the sports he played, but he particularly loved baseball.

He followed his brothers to the park when they played and came along when the boys took lessons from local hitting guru Jerry Mahoney at the Shell Building.

"He always liked baseball the best," said Scott, a former WVU football player and now a project manager at March-Westin.

"That was his passion. Even when Jerry Mahoney pitched to us when we were young, Jedd would come to hit and field ground balls when we were playing. He always took more reps than I did when I was playing."

enough of the game at home, either. Jedd and his father, Randy, watched major-league games on television, with father instructing son on the right way to play the game.

"My dad is a baseball guy," said brother Randy, a West Virginia Radio Corp. employee. "Jedd is pretty much the spitting image of my dad from a competitive standpoint and the way he approaches things. They always watched baseball games growing up. Jedd was always at the park. He always gravitated to baseball more than anything else."

Jedd launched his prep career at University High as a three-sport performer — football in the fall, basketball in the winter and baseball in the spring and summer.

He dropped football from his busy schedule early in his career to concentrate on basketball and baseball. He played varsity basketball as a freshman. Longtime UHS fans recall a much younger Jedd draining 3-pointers at half-time of Scott's games.

Jedd missed the first few baseball practices of his freshman season because of his basketball commitment. That 2004 UHS baseball team was one of the school's finest, making the state tournament. One of its players, Josh Judy, pitches in the Cleveland Indians' farm system, at Class AAA Columbus, Ohio.

UHS baseball coach Jeff Stanley will never forget Jedd's first practice, not so much for what he saw but what he heard.

"We were practicing on Saturday morning indoors," Stanley said. "I'm standing there talking to one of the assistant coaches. I hear the ball coming off the bat two or three times. I'm like, 'Wow!'

"I have to turn around to look and see who is hitting. Here it is this freshman I've heard about but haven't really seen very much. Even at 14 or 15, he had skills your normal baseball player doesn't have."

Jedd began his prep career as a designated hitter and played different positions in the infield, depending on who was pitching. That arrangement lasted until the halfway point of the season, when senior shortstop Tommy Weidman approached Stanley.

"Coach, I think we're a better team with Jedd at shortstop," Weidman said.

Stanley agreed. "You don't have a senior too often who is going to give up his position for the betterment of the team," he said. "We were a better team with Jedd in there."

Jedd led off for the Hawks, as Stanley attempted to get him as many at-bats as possible. He played shortstop and pitched for four years. Stanley wished he could have had Jedd for four more when he graduated, in 2007.

"He's the best player I've ever coached," Stanley said. "I have no problems saying that because I'm only in my eighth year. Obviously, we've had some very good ones — the Drew Jacksons, the Kurtis Clintons — but Jedd is the best I've had as a head coach."

Jedd also starred in the summers as shortstop for Morgantown Post 2's American Legion team, helping the team to two state championships, hitting 40 career home runs and driving in 231 runs.

Naturally, Jedd attracted attention from college recruiters. WVU coach

Greg Van Zant watched him play. St. John's, WVU's Big East Conference rival, also showed an interest, with former WVU graduate assistant coach Mike Hampton handling the recruitment.

In the end, the lure of playing at Hawley Field in front of his family and friends proved too tempting to resist. Jedd became a Mountaineer.

Soaring ever higher

Jedd's production hardly dipped at the collegiate level. He batted .409 with eight home runs and 63 RBIs as a freshman, in 2008, earning Big East rookie of the year honors as well as a spot on the all-Big East second team.

He played second base as a freshman because the Mountaineers had senior Tyler Kuhn at shortstop. He made only nine errors in 56 games. Jedd played with a sore shoulder for much of the year and underwent surgery that summer.

A healthy Jedd returned to shortstop as a sophomore with predictable results: a .421 batting average, with eight home runs and 58 RBIs. He made the all-Big East first team.

Jedd received an invitation to play in the prestigious Cape Cod League the summer after his sophomore season. He emerged as one of the Cape's top hitters for the Brewster Whitecaps, drawing the attention of professional scouts. His performances at the plate and in the field attracted comparisons to big-league infielders Kevin Youkilis and Dan Uggla.

Talk of Jedd becoming a first-round draft pick intensified.

"When he was at the Cape, he was talking to [scouts] every day after games," Scott said.

He was the Big East's preseason player of the year entering this season and persevered through a trying season for a young Mountaineers team. Jedd hit leadoff and batted .381, with 19 home runs and 57 RBIs. He swatted a school record-tying 28 doubles. He was solid defensively, committing only eight errors in 57 games.

"People don't talk about his defense a whole lot because he's such a great hitter," Van Zant said. "He really elevated his game defensively from the time he got here to now with a lot of hard work and repetitions."

Jedd went 2-for-4 with two doubles in what was likely his final game in a WVU uniform, a 10-5 loss to South Florida, in the Big East tournament. He finished his WVU career as the school leader in batting average (.404), doubles (73) and extra-base hits (113). He's tied with Tim McCabe for first place on the home run list, with 35.

"I knew he'd do well because of how hard he works, but I didn't realize he'd do that well," Scott said. "If you look at the records he's set after his junior year, it would be hard to ring up somebody who was better. I think it's safe to say if Jedd were to play one more year, he'd pretty much shatter every offensive record."

Pro prospects

Jedd has spent most of his time on the phone fielding calls from scouts and scouting directors since WVU's season ended, on May 27.

He did some traveling recently, working out in Fenway Park for the Red Sox and in AT&T Park in San Francisco for the Giants. Draft analysts have projected Jedd as a mid to late first-round pick.

Scouts are most impressed with Jedd's bat. One National League team scout rated his hitting ability a 60 on the 20-80 scouting scale. A 50 is major-league average. A 60 is all-star quality.

"He can really hit," the scout said. (The Dominion Post agreed to withhold his identity.) "He has some power. His bat is his biggest plus, no question."

Scouts are more concerned about his speed and what position he will ultimately play in professional baseball. Jedd's speed is generally rated below average, which leads scouts to believe he is a better candidate for second base or third base in the pros.

"I'd put him at second base and see how it works, maybe third base," the National League team scout said. "If he can't handle the infield, you can put him in the outfield. He has good hands."

Van Zant was convinced two years ago that Jedd would have to move to the outfield in pro ball. He no longer holds that opinion.

"He's gotten to the point where he's gone from an adequate shortstop last year to a great shortstop this year," he said. "He makes plays that not many college shortstops make."

Jedd maintains that he'll play wherever he's asked.

"I'm going to go in open-minded," he said. "Whatever the team needs me to do, I'll give it everything I have to be successful."

He hopes to launch his professional career as soon as he can. He and his parents will huddle with his advisor, Hank King, of Aces Inc., when it comes time to discuss a contract.

He could be looking at a low seven-figure signing bonus if he is drafted in the first round. He'll have until midnight Aug. 17 to sign with the team that drafts him.

"I just want fair money for the round I'm selected," Jedd said. "I'm not going to be one of those guys who waits until the very last minute to sign just get an extra buck in my pocket. I have an opportunity to play professional baseball, and that's what I want to do."

Borther Randy is adamant that money and the status that comes with being a professional athlete will not change Jedd.

"Getting a lot of attention at a young age hasn't affected him," Randy said. "I'd like to think he'll be able to go out there and treat baseball the same way he always has. You hear stories about kids signing for a lot of money and feeling the pressure to live up to those expectations. Jedd is comfortable and confident in his ability. He'll be able to do what he's been doing and has been taught to do."

Always a West Virginian

Jedd figures he'll probably gather with the rest of his family at his parents' home to watch the draft on television.

"It will be an exciting time," he said. "I wouldn't want to miss it."

His selection will mark the beginning of the next chapter in his life, one he hopes will eventually end as a major-league ballplayer. As he reflects on his journey, he can't help but be grateful to the coaches, teammates, teachers and friends who have helped him along the way.

"I'm looking forward to the next step in my career and in my life," he said. "I can't say enough for what everyone around the community has done for me. I'm thankful I have these people behind my back."

He may settle elsewhere in the future, but he will never forget his roots.

"I was born and raised here," Jedd said. "Morgantown and West Virginia University will always be my home."

Bridgeport blanked in AAA final

Nitro takes the title, 6-0

STATE BASEBALL TOURNAMENT

Associated Press

CHARLESTON — Zach Cloxton figured the best way to stop his streak of outs at the plate was to hit the ball where there weren't any opposing fielders.

That meant over the right field wall.

Cloxton homered twice and drove in five runs to lead Nitro to a 6-0 win against Bridgeport on Saturday, giving the Wildcats their second Class AAA championship in three seasons.

Cloxton's single to lead off the game broke a streak of nine at-bats without a hit. His night only got better.

"Last night I actually felt like I was hitting the ball well, just hitting it right at them," said Cloxton, who transferred to Nitro from Winfield a year ago. "I was just like, 'I don't know what to do,' because wherever I hit it, there's a guy right there. I figured if I hit one over the fence, they wouldn't be able to catch it."

Cloxton hit a 1-0 pitch with two out in the second inning for his fifth homer of the season, off Bridgeport starter Brady Weaver. It came after Clay Riggelman reached base on an infield error and Daniel Ramsey walked.

Cloxton did it again in the fourth. After Ramsey walked, Cloxton hit the first pitch over the wall in right-center. The ball bounced back onto the field, but the first-base umpire rule it a home run.

It gave Nitro (33-4) a 5-0 lead.

In the sixth inning, Cloxton was intentionally walked to load the bases with one out. Tyler Godbey followed with a sacrifice fly to complete the scoring.

Bridgeport (24-13) managed just two hits off Nitro starter J.R. Bradley and Riggelman, stranded seven runners and put just one runner past second base.

"We didn't hit the ball on the ground a lot to force many plays," Bridgeport coach Robert Shields said. "I knew it was going to take six or seven runs to win this ball game."

Class AA

Braxton County 11 James Monroe 3

Aaron Conant pitched a complete game and Conant and Ristie Nicholas had three hits and drove in two runs apiece as Braxton County (24-6) won the first state title in any sport in school history.

Conant scattered seven hits, struck out seven and walked four.

Madonna 8, Man 3

Lou Comis and Eddie Nogay homered during a six-run fifth inning and Madonna beat Man for the championship.

Madonna (25-7) also beat the Hillbillies for the Class A football title, in December.

Madonna pounded out 13 hits. Comis, Nogay, Logan Linder and Austin Pitchcock drove in two runs apiece.

Man (26-11) had 13 hits in a 16-5 semifinal win against Fayetteville but scratched out just three hits in losing in the championship game for the second straight year.

Rasmus' hit wins for Cards

BASEBALL

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Colby Rasmus singled home the winning run in the 11th inning to lift the St. Louis Cardinals to a 5-4 victory against the Milwaukee Brewers on Saturday.

Newly acquired Aaron Miles singled with one out in the 11th and advanced to second on Yadier Molina's base hit to center. Rasmus, who had three hits and three RBIs, laced a shot just in front of outfielder Jim Edmonds. Edmonds held on to the ball with Miles already around third.

The Brewers failed to take advantage of two errors, including one that allowed Edmonds to reach second to start the 11th.

But with runners on first and second and one out, reliever Mitchell Boggs got Carlos Gomez to fly out, and Rickie Weeks grounded out to end the inning.

Mets 6, Marlins 1

NEW YORK — Jonathon Niese (2-2) pitched brilliantly in his return from the disabled list and David Wright hit a rare homer at Citi Field, lifting New York past Florida.

Wright drove in three runs and rookie Ike Davis went 4-for-4 to break out of a mini-slump as New York improved to 21-9 at home with its seventh straight win here. Jeff Francoeur had an RBI single and Ruben Tejada a run-scoring double off Nate Robertson (4-5), who beat the Mets twice this season.

American league

Angels 11, Mariners 2

SEATTLE — Torii Hunter had three hits and three RBIs, and keyed a decisive six-run sixth inning to lead surging Los Angeles past Seattle.

The Angels won for the ninth time in 11 games, and improved to 5-1 on a 14-game road trip — the team's longest trek in eight years.

Ervin Santana (6-3) won his fifth consecutive start.

Rangers 6, Rays 1

ARLINGTON, Texas — Tommy Hunter pitched a five-hitter in his season debut, Josh Hamilton homered and Texas beat Tampa Bay.

Blue Jays 3, Yankees 2

TORONTO — Aaron Hill singled home the winning run in the 14th inning and Toronto beat New York.

Facing right-hander Chad Gaudin (0-3), Edwin Encarnacion led off the bottom of the 14th with a walk, then took second on Fred Lewis' sacrifice bunt.

Hill followed with a single.

S. Africa eager for World Cup

Monthlong tournament opens Friday

Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG — It's almost here at last. After years of planning, worry, debate, tension and — perhaps most of all — anticipation, South Africa will host the first World Cup on its continent starting Friday, ready or not.

This diverse nation can hardly wait.

"There are no words to describe it," Malin Fisher said. "It's amazing."

The man should know. A 32-year-old trainee church minister from suburban Johannesburg, he became the first fan to buy World Cup tickets over the counter, after waiting overnight outside a shopping mall, sleeping on a camping chair wrapped in blankets. His reward: two seats at the July 11 final.

Fisher is just one example of how this nation of nearly 50 million has gone crazy for soccer, and for this moment when it is at the center of the planet's attention.

People all over the globe will be watching the month-long tournament, eager to see what South Africa is all about and if Africa's first host can pull off such a massive show despite being a developing democracy, just 16 years removed from its first post-apartheid election.

There will be some rough edges. Even last week, highway workers were rushing to finish improvements just down the road from O.R. Tambo International Airport in Johannesburg.

But if the question is whether the South Africans are ready to welcome the biggest event for the world's popular sport, the answer is a resounding yes.

The new slogan for the main cable sports TV channel is "2010: Once in a lifetime."

Preakness and Derby winners not in the field

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Drosselmeyer finally got a shot in a Triple Crown race and it paid off with an upset in the $1 million Belmont Stakes.

Left out of the Kentucky Derby because he hadn't earned enough money to qualify, Drosselmeyer staged a stirring stretch run and beat Fly Down by three-quarters of a length Saturday, in the final leg of the Triple Crown.

With neither Kentucky Derby winner Super Saver nor Preakness winner Lookin At Lucky in the field, the 1 1/2-mile Belmont looked to be a matchup of classic runner-ups — Ice Box from the Derby vs. First Dude from the Preakness.

First Dude took the lead from the start, but couldn't hold off Drosselmeyer in the stretch and finished third. Ice Box, the 95 favorite trained by Nick Zito, was never in contention and finished ninth in the 12-horse field. Fly Down, also trained by Zito, was the second choice, at 5-1.

The victory not only reaffirmed Drosselmeyer's talent after failing to win in his past three starts, but it also produced a few firsts for a pair of Hall of Famers.

Jockey Mike Smith ended his 0-for-12 record in the Belmont, and trainer Bill Mott won his first Triple Crown race.

"It all came together," said Mott, best known as the trainer of the great Cigar in 1995-96. "I think it was just a matter of time with some of the good horses I get to train that it was going to happen."

One reason it happened may be a jockey switch to Smith from Kent Desormeaux.

"I felt like the horse needed a little change in routine," WinStar Farm racing manager Elliott Walden said. "We went to Mike because we felt he would get him in a rhythm and keep him running. This horse really kicked hard turning for home and finished strong."

WinStar seems to making all the right calls these days, and closed out the Triple Crown with wins in two races — it also owns Kentucky Derby winner Super Saver. Super Saver and Preakness winner Lookin At Lucky did not run in the final leg of the Triple Crown.

On a hot, sunny Saturday in front of 45,243 at Belmont Park, Drosselmeyer was sent off at odds of 13-1. It was Smith who made a key decision to keep his long-striding colt in the clear. He eased the gleaming chestnut to the outside for the run down the backstretch, always keeping First Dude within range.

Fowler holds 3-shot lead at Memorial

GOLF

Associated Press

DUBLIN, Ohio — Rickie Fowler is one round closer to joining the youth movement on the PGA Tour.

On another day of rain at the Memorial, Fowler; 21, extended his bogey-free streak to 52 holes and made enough birdies for a 3-under 69

Saturday that gave him a three-shot lead going into the final round at Muirfield Village.

Fowler was at 16-under 200 and had the largest 54-hole lead at the Memorial since Tiger Woods led by six in 2000. A victory would be the third by a player 22 years old or younger in the past six weeks.

Ricky Barnes, who played with Woods, dazzled the large gallery with a 10-under 62 and was at 203, along with Tim Petrovic (68).

Woods, the defending champion, shot a 69 with a double bogey and was 10 shots behind. Phil Mickelson also failed to take advantage of the soft and vulnerable course with a 70, leaving him eight shots back.

Champions-Principal Charity Classic

WEST DES MOINES, Iowa — Nick Price topped the second-round leaderboard again, shooting a 6-under 65 to match Tommy Armour III at 10-under 132 at Glen Oaks Country Club.

Price lost the past two years after holding at least a share of the second-round lead. He three-putted the final hole in 2008 to hand the title to Jay Haas, then lost to Mark McNulty in 2009, in a three-man playoff.

Armour followed his opening 63 with a 69.

Don Pooley, the 2003 winner, was 9 under after a 65. Bruce Vaughan (66), Dan Forsman (68) and Russ Cochran (68) were another shot back. Fred Couples, a three-time winner in seven senior starts, was 2 under.

Many great memories of going camping

CAMPING HAS ALWAYS been one of my favorite outdoor activities. As kids, my brothers and I would pitch a tent in the backyard, grab our sleeping bags and camp out. I remember one summer night when the rain came down in buckets, but we stuck it out, getting wet in our little pup tent in the yard. It was an adventure.

Then there were our annual one-week late summer vacations on the Cacapon River. Every year, my brothers and I spent three days of that vacation camping. Dad would drive us up to a put-in place near Slaneysville, and we'd camp and fish our way down to Largent. We'd catch hellgrammites in the riffles and use them to snag some great small-mouth bass. When we would find a good spot to fish, we'd pull the boat to shore and stay for a while.

In those days, we never saw anyone on the river. I'm sure that has all changed, but back then, there was no one on the river, and I can remember only one cabin along the way. What fun.

There was one stretch with huge cliffs on one side, and wild goats lived there. We'd take binoculars and stop in that area, looking for those goats and dreaming about a bowhunt. We probably were too young to be on the river alone, but that thought never entered our minds. It was a trip that we looked forward to every year, and the memories are still vivid 60 years later.

I'm not alone in a love for camping. In 2008, more than 42 million people went camping, and they did so an average of 14 days. That's around 15 percent of us who camped, either in the backyard, getting there in cars or in an RV (recreational vehicle). The higher percentage of campers is in the 5- to 12-year-old bracket (23 percent). By age 18-24, that number has dropped to 15 percent, then inches up to 17 percent by age 44.

You might think that all the campers would be males, but that isn't true. Forty-four percent of campers are women. And older folks like to camp too, with 28 percent being more than 45 years of age. Even folks who make more than $100,000 a year and can obviously afford the best motels or hotels like to camp (25 percent of all campers fit this group).

There are regional differences in the percentage of campers. Fourteen percent of those from our region camp, but on the Pacific Coast, 19 percent camp. The lowest percentage of campers (4.6) lives in New England. Guess they just feel that living there is like camping out.

Backyard and car campers use public campgrounds the most (72 percent), while RV campers obviously use a private campground the most.

What do people do when they camp? The backyard and car campers like to hike (54 percent), swim (48 percent), bike (20 percent), birdwatch (17 percent), jog (15 percent), canoe (13 percent), hunt (10 percent) and ride horses (7 percent).

Then there are those crazy winter campers who like to ski (4 percent) and snowshoe (2 percent).

Fishing wasn't listed in the data I looked at, and that puzzles me. I'm sure fishing is a big part of camping. It sure was for me growing up. And I know lots of folks who still camp out when they fish.

How did people get introduced to camping? Friends (43 percent), parents (38 percent), brothers and sisters and other relatives (29 percent), and "myself" (28 percent just decided on their own to go camp).

Apparently if you hang out with people who like the outdoors, then you camp a lot. I was introduced to it by parents, and we camped out simply because it was all we could afford to do. Or maybe it was because we just loved doing it.

Regardless of whether you camp in your backyard, use a car to get to a camping location or just spend the night in a beautiful spot in your RV, camping is fun. Maybe it is time to take your family on a camping trip.

No place better than West Virginia.

Spring gobbler season results

THE PRELIMINARY NUMBERS are in on this year's spring gobbler season, and the kill was up by about 2 percent, at 10,006. This is the first time the harvest has hit 10,000 since 2006. Even with the harvest up this year, there were some amazing changes from 2009.

Preston County was a big surprise. Normally, Preston ranks second or third in the state; this year Preston was down a whopping 40 percent.

My friend Howie Pentony, of Butler, Pa., always keeps a watchful eye on such things and sent me an e-mail about this large decrease. He said, "Preston down 40%. I think it is interesting that no one bothered to address that. I thought that Curtis [Taylor] would have a comment or two. Weather, winter kill, or something. What do you think?"

Well, I have no scientific or biologic evidence that would lead me to a sound conclusion and therefore won't speculate as to why the kill was down so much. The heavy snows this past winter may have been a factor, but who knows? Many hunters only hunt the first week and miss some of the best gobbling. Also, I have no idea what the brood counts were for Preston County in 2009.

One retired wildlife biologist who hunts turkeys in nine states said the birds really weren't acting right anywhere he hunted. He did manage to get seven birds, but didn't hear a single gobbler in Michigan or Tennessee.

At the other end of the spectrum, a big surprise was the large increase in the kill in District 5, which includes Kanawha and surrounding counties. The district had an increase of 620 birds. Mason County, which usually leads the state, went from 419 to 536 birds. Putnam increased from 256 to 315 and Wayne jumped from 146 to 239.

Fellow DNR Commissioner Kenny Wilson, who lives in Logan County, also in District 5, told me they didn't hear any gobbling to speak of before the season and during the first week, but then it picked up substantially and they started killing some birds. Logan County's kill increased from 160 to 194.

This brings up another point. Every year, and I mean every year, I hear from hunters saying that the season opens too late. They say the birds are "all gobbled out" by the time the season begins. Well, as I've reported before, this just isn't so.

The peak of gobbling in West Virginia occurs between April 22 and May 1. We have many years of gobbling survey data showing that four of the five best dates to bag a bird are April 28 or later. No opening date other than one around mid-April or earlier would satisfy those who want an earlier season, no matter how much data exists to contradict their theories and beliefs. The evidence is overwhelming in favor of a later opening date to assure the survival of the hens.

The average peak of incubation in West Virginia is April 30. The current opening date encompasses the time period when an acceptable number, 50 percent or higher, of the hens are nesting and less vulnerable to illegal killing. It has nothing to do with when we begin to hear gobbling and see the boys "strut their stuff."

It is for the protection of the resource.

The first spring gobbler season in West Virginia was open from May 9-14, 1966, on selected Wildlife Management Areas with a total harvest of 12 birds. The season opened statewide in 1968. Prior to this, the only turkey hunting in this state was in the fall. The turkey hunters didn't want a spring season because they thought all of the turkeys would be killed.

Funny how it didn't work out that way.

Our natural resources should be managed by sound biological data and not public opinion. Our system works. We enjoy some of the best turkey hunting in the nation considering our harvest per square mile and the population.

Keep watching for new counties that will be added to the list for the fall season.

Sporting-clays shoot today

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Mason-Dixon Rifle Club will be hosting the monthly sporting clay shoot today. The club will be throwing mostly "going away" targets to start the season (last month's shoot was rained out). Registration is at 2:30 p.m., shooting starts at 3. Nonmembers are welcome.

The charge is $14 for the 100-clay shoot. Bring at least 100 shells in No. 7 1/2 or No. 8 shot.

GO FISH! (W.VA. DNR)

Cheat Lake

The embayments at Cheat Lake Park will warm faster than the main lake and are good areas for bank anglers to catch catfish, sunfish and largemouth bass. Now is the time to fish for big bass. Cheat Lake has been one of the top lakes for bass fishing tournament success for five years. The smallmouth bass population is expanding throughout the lake. Keep track of the lake elevation and predicted daily changes in elevation at cheatlaketoday.com. Try the tailwater fishing pier for walleye and sauger. Jigs with minnows or 3-inch power grubs are the best baits. White or chartreuse is a good color. Start fishing at dusk, when sauger and walleye begin feeding. The pier is about 25 minutes from Morgantown. Take U.S. 119 to Point Marion, Pa., turn right after crossing the Cheat River and proceed 4 miles to Cheat Dam. The pier is lighted for night fishing and is handicapped accessible.

Monongahela River

The lock and dam tailwaters are the best areas to fish for all species now that the river is at a normal seasonal level. Sauger and walleye are always attracted to the currents at lock and dam tailwaters. A good area for bank fishermen is the calm water at the approach to the locks on the Westover side of the river. During normal flows, start fishing about an hour before sunset, because sauger and walleye will begin feeding at dusk. Jigs with minnows are particularly good baits but 3-inch plastic grubs will also be productive. White or chartreuse is a good color. Channel and flathead catfish are abundant throughout the river. Start practicing for the Cabela's King Cat Tournament June 26, at Morgantown.

Tygart Lake

The lake has been at the summer level for the past week. Walleye move into shallow water at dusk to feed. During the day, try using jigs and minnows in 30-to-50-foot depths. Smallmouth bass can be caught using crankbaits or tube jigs along the shoreline. Look for white bass at the head of coves or the upper part of the lake. Fish for crappie in the fish shelters between the boat ramps at the marina. Walleye numbers are as high as they will be for the year in the tailwater, and this is the best place in northern West Virginia to fish for them. There are also lots of trout in the tailwater. ## In with new school year

State, districts need to study how to meet 180-day mandate

For all intents and purposes, the school year ended two weeks ago.

It's official Monday, but since the West Virginia Educational Standards Test ended May 20, most students have been cruising.

Between field trips, optional finals, talent shows, multicultural days, the seniors' dismissal and fun fairs, real classroom time since then has been an exception.

We realize that there are exceptions to this, too. Some teachers have continued to assign homework, insist students proof math problems and make the most out of lab time.

But they are the "overachievers."

It was recently reported that not one of West Virginia's 55 school districts was able to comply with the state-mandated 180 days of instruction.

Locally, Monongalia County recorded 13 snow days, of which only a handful were made up. Preston County missed twice that and also was only able to make up a few of them.

Earlier this year, after introducing bills for nearly a decade in the Legislature, lawmakers finally agreed to give school districts latitude in determining their calendars.

This academic year is the last one that requires state schools to not start earlier than Aug. 26 and end no later than June 8.

Locally, next year's school calendars are already set to start earlier — a week earlier in Preston County — with numerous days built in for snow.

One flaw in this legislation is that service workers' contracts continue to box school systems into a tight schedule. Yet, this legislation will help.

School systems still don't control the weather, but now they do have some control over the calendar.

But more must be done to ensure students get 180 days of instruction each year.

We would start with our school systems' approach to the final weeks of the school year.

One solution may be to simply schedule the state's standardized exams later in May or during the first week in June.

Year-round schools should also be considered, though we suspect that widespread acceptance of that option is probably years away.

Another answer that became apparent this February is more needs to be done to prepare for bad weather by preparing snowbound assignments.

Online classes are also seemingly more and more feasible as Internet access expands.

Admittedly, we don't have all the answers. Yet, call us old school, because we believe taking notes, reading texts, reviewing materials and being tested day in and day out is how you learn — year-round.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Right to use road not based on what we pay

This letter is in response to Dennis Bolyard's letter to the editor (DP-May 26) about bicycles and the rights to road usage. I understand his argument that because bicycles don't pay as much in taxes and insurance they should be afforded fewer rights.

Sadly, in the same day's paper, the lead story of the day was of a log truck driver charged with hit-and-run in the death of a woman on Point Marion Road [U.S. 119]. By extension to Bolyard's argument, are we now to consider this simply justifiable homicide in a battle of competing rights? Would a log truck that pays more in insurance and taxes, by extension, receive more rights to road usage, too?

Newer automobiles and high-end automobiles pay more in personal property taxes than do older or lower-end models. As our automobiles age, should our road rights not also diminish? A Mercedes E class paying more in taxes and insurance should be able to demonstrate its superiority of rights with blaring horns and extended fingers. Should not my new Ford Power Stroke diesel pickup be allowed to squash a 1990 Chevy Cavalier simply on principle of competing rights? Who needs Bigfoot.

ATVs use our roadways as well, and these vehicles need not be registered, inspected or insured. The riders have no age restriction and need no license or helmet nor does the vehicle need a license plate. Running lights, head lamps or turn signals are all optional. Personal property taxes? Yeah, sure.

Where is the outrage at these freeloaders? I can't believe there isn't a "Death Race 2000" organized by those who think like Bolyard to exert their rights like some drivers do. I surely encounter more ATVs in my travels on our roadways than I do bicyclers.

I guess the real issue is that bicycles go slower than ATVs and make us slow down and therefore attract more ire, and nothing ticks us off more than having to slow down.

Happy trails, but beware: When our rights are based on how much we pay, only the wealthy will have rights that matter, like fortunate BP and the unfortunate Gulf fishermen.

Blowup on mosque at ground zero

Houston talk-show host Michael Perry couldn't contain himself. When a listener named Tony called in May 26 to defend a plan to build an Islamic center near New York City's 9/11 ground zero, Perry exploded.

"No, no, Tony, you can't build a mosque at the site of 9/11. And I'll tell you this — if you do build a mosque, I hope somebody blows it up — I hope the mosque isn't built, and if it is, I hope it's blown up, and I mean that."

Perry later backed away from his rhetoric, after a Muslim civil rights group complained to the FCC.

But his exchange about the fate of a future mosque came two weeks after the bombing of an actual mosque in Jacksonville, Fla.

Meanwhile in New York City, the Community Board in lower Manhattan approved a plan to build the center two blocks from where the Twin Towers once stood.

Pamela Geller, leader of a group called "Stop Islamization of America," testified against the proposal. During a recent speech to a Tea Party convention in Tennessee, she described the center as "a shrine to the ideology that inspired 9/11."

Lost in this haze of hatemongering is the legitimate flap over wisdom of a plan for the 13-story Islamic center.

Imam Feisal Abdul Rauf, who leads the effort, contends that the center with facilities open to all faiths will help promote interfaith understanding and encourage integration of Muslims into American society.

But some Muslim Americans see it differently. M. Zuhr Jasser, president of the American Islamic Forum for Democracy, believes the proposal is misguided. "The site represents Ground Zero in America's war against radical Islamists who seek to destroy the American way of life," he wrote in the New York Post. "It is not ground zero of a cultural exchange."

Geller and her supporters, however, aren't interested in having a civil exchange about appropriate development near the 9/11 site. They reject any place for Islam in America. Calling Islam "the religion of barbarism" that "inspired Hitler and the Nazis," Geller sees the war on terrorism as a fight against Islam itself.

Islam is not the first religion to confront wholesale condemnation in the United States. In the days before talk shows and blogs, anti-Catholic forces used pamphlets, newspapers and books to disseminate propaganda demonizing the Catholic Church as a threat to American democracy and freedom.

Though the historical and sociological reasons for anti-Catholicism then differ from the causes of prejudice against Islam today, efforts to marginalize both religions have similarities. Just as Catholics were once feared as "un-American" followers of a "foreign prince," so now are Muslims targets of those who see adherence to Islam as incompatible with American freedom.

Then, as now, words of hate and ignorance can sometimes inspire acts of violence. Widespread public acceptance of lies about Catholicism led a mob of Protestants in Charlestown, Mass., to burn a convent to the ground in 1834 — an attack that went unpunished. According to one historian, the destruction of the convent "initiated a wave of shootings, hangings and burnings that continued to the 1860s."

Surely we are better than that now.

And I can't help but believe the majority of Americans are willing to stand up for their Muslim neighbors and fellow citizens by protecting their right to worship openly and freely without fear of intimidation or violence.

Up a creek?

Obama should look upstream to water woes

THE WASHINGTON PRESS CORPS put Barack Obama on the defensive last week, forcing him to look backward at his handling of the BP oil spill. I confess to some agitation when we journalists spend so much time pressing politicians to look behind them. Some of that obviously is necessary, but we need to spend as much time getting them to look ahead at big problems bearing down upon us.

The Economist cast a look forward last week, alerting its readers to the water challenges faced in just about every corner of the globe. My favorite line: "If water has the capacity to enhance life, its absence has the capacity to make it miserable."

Take a deep breath — the U.S. is not running out of water. But many states increasingly confront tough choices about how to find it, allocate it and conserve it. And, if they don't get ahead of that, there will come a day when thirsty people will ask why their leaders didn't plan better.

Which is why Obama should look ahead and set in motion a planning process, not a top-down federal operation, as some in Congress envision. There's no way Washington can know all the ins and outs of each state's water needs.

The administration and Congress should require every state to craft a 50-year water plan. And municipal leaders, business executives, environmentalists, hydrologists, citizen activists and others with a direct interest in their state's water supplies should be part of this.

Texas has had such an operation for the last decade. In 1997, legislators divided the state into 16 regions, required local folks in each to create water planning councils and mandated that various "stakeholders" participate. That last part has been crucial. There is a tendency in water policy discussions for people to talk about the "water community" and the "environmental community." They, too, often see each other as opponents.

Texas' planning process forces people from different backgrounds to hash out their agendas. Not everyone likes the final product. In fact, things get messy. There's a growing brouhaha now about how much water from Texas' rivers should go to cities and farmers and how much should flow into the Gulf of Mexico.

What's more, a plan won't matter if a state doesn't act on it, which is a risk here if legislators continue to fail to create a way to finance Texas' 50-year plan. If lawmakers keep stalling, the costs only grow. So will the chances that some parts of Texas won't be ready for the next big drought.

But at least Texas has a way to identify future supplies, which you can't say about every other state. And in Texas all sides are given a chance to make their case, whether that's about the best approach to conservation, aquifers, rivers or lakes.

This strikes me as an approach Obama should like. He's big on people of different stripes trying to iron out com-

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Washington should cut off foreign aid to Israel

It's time for the United States to end all aid to Israel. The Israeli navy has attacked — in international waters — a flotilla of unarmed ships carrying humanitarian aid to the people of Gaza. The ships are from several European countries as were the 700 people aboard, including Holocaust survivors. The navy attackers killed nine people and injured at least 36. Israel claims the commandoes were attacked, but the ship's passengers announced for days that they were unarmed and carrying only humanitarian aid materials. As far as I am concerned the official Israeli spin on the situation has no credibility whatsoever.

The Israeli navy's unprovoked attack in international waters was totally unnecessary for Israel's defense. It is murder, and should be prosecuted as such. It is an extreme example of the path the Israeli government has chosen in violating the human rights of not just the Palestinian people in general, but all people who oppose or criticize them. This policy is wrong and must be stopped.

It is time for the United States to let Israel know that they can no longer commit such acts of violence without suffering consequences. It is time for the United States to stand strongly on its principles. It is time for President Obama and our Congress to immediately end all aid to Israel. It is time to demand that our representatives demand an end to the siege of Gaza, which has gone unhindered since 2007.

It is time to demand international sanctions against Israel. It is time to invite Hamas to the negotiating table; after all, they were elected by the citizens of Gaza and should be allowed in the negotiations.

It is time to make your voice heard. I have written to President Obama. Will you? Are you brave enough to speak up for what is right? This is not a condemnation of any Jewish people either here or in Israel. It is a condemnation of a repressive military government which ignores international law and has perpetrated violence, imprisonment and death on innocent people one time too many. The children of Gaza have suffered enough.

It's time for Israel to lift the siege and negotiate a lasting peace. My prayers are with the peace activists who were killed, and with their families and their children.

Mainstream media hides truth on raid

By now we are aware of the confrontation between Israeli naval forces and a Turkish [humanitarian] flotilla off the coast of the Gaza Strip.

What you have not heard is the truth from the mainstream media. Here is the truth:

■ Israel cannot allow ships to go directly to Gaza for security reasons. Innocent Israeli families are threatened daily with missile attacks launched from Gaza, and Israel must ensure weapons are not being smuggled into Gaza in "humanitarian" cargoes. Israel offered to offload all humanitarian supplies on board this ship and deliver them to Gaza.

■ These Turkish ships know that the United Nations will deliver any and all humanitarian supplies after first examining shipments to make sure they contain no weapons. Thus it appears they deliberately provoked this incident for propaganda purposes.

■ Israeli commandoes were attacked by the "humanitarian" workers on this ship who were armed with iron bars and knives. One soldier was thrown off an upper deck and fell 30 feet to the deck below, sustaining significant injuries to his head.

■ Israeli soldiers repeatedly told each other, "Don't shoot! Don't shoot!" as they rappelled to the ship's surface. They fired as a last resort and in self-defense.

■ According to the Weekly Standard, the organization behind this flotilla belongs to the Union of Good, which was created for the specific purpose of transferring tens of millions of dollars a year to Hamas-controlled entities in the Gaza Strip and whose leaders have been named by the U.S. State Department as Specially Designated Global Terrorists.

The Obama administration and the mainstream media will continue to paint Israel as the bad guys. However, the Israelis are only trying to protect themselves from an ever-increasing threat to their own security.

We must insist that President Obama and his administration stand for the rights of the Israelis at a time when they need us to do so.

A lot of attention has been given to the Upper Big Branch Mine disaster and the families that lost loved ones in that explosion.

It truly hits home for me every time another life is taken for coal. I am the granddaughter of Lloyd W. Wilson. My grandfather was killed in the Farmington No. 9 explosion in 1968. He was the 33rd miner removed from the mine in September 1973.

My grandmother, Cora Wilson, along with Sarah Kaznoski and several other widows, fought for the mining laws that the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration uses today. The 1969 Coal Mine Health and Safety Act gave miners a voice and reasonable knowledge of returning home safe everyday. My grandmother attended these meetings, and went to Charleston and Washington, D.C., to see these laws put in place.

I am married to Tim Efav, a Patriot Federal No. 2 coal miner.

Recently, at my husband's mine, a fire boss confessed to falsifying records on methane checks. This man could very well have caused another mine explosion. He is looking at 1-5 years in prison for falsifying records on the federal level. The way I have to look at it he should have been arrested for conspiracy to commit murder.

With explosions in coal mines, it does not take a rocket scientist to know that high levels of methane are involved.

The facts keep building up, a trend of blood for coal is being accepted once again. These are not accidents. They are disasters caused by gross negligence killing our miners.

Yes, laws are in place, but if they are not enforced what good are they? We have found out what happens to our loved ones when the people who are supposed to enforce the laws are slack. We have found out about corporate greed using corporate money to fight citations.

Stop the backlog of appeals by corporate lawyers and eliminate the loopholes.

I sit here with newspapers from the last few weeks and know we need to have a resurrection of the 1969 Mine Health and Safety Act. We owe it to the widows of Farmington No. 9, Sago, Upper Big Branch and all of the others to say: Stop! We can no longer sit by and allow the killing of our miners due to safety violations not being corrected.

The cost of not hunting urban deer

An often overlooked point about an urban deer hunt is this: The people who are in favor of an urban deer hunt are asking [Morgantown's] City Council to invest thousands of valuable tax dollars to commit to a highly controversial systematic killing operation that polarizes citizens and raises philosophical and ethical questions about our community.

This killing and commitment of resources, most likely, would go on for months and years, with no guarantee that it would even reduce our urban deer population and with no hard data on the true cost of this commitment.

Wildlife biologists and hunters know that killing deer does not necessarily lead to reduction in the size of a herd. Whenever there's an abrupt, short-term drop in the deer population, as would occur following a bait-and-shoot operation as Dr. Dave Samuel, chair of the Urban Deer Hunt Committee suggested, a phenomenon called "compensatory rebound" comes into effect. Since the same amount of food is now available to fewer animals, the bodies of the deer react by becoming more fertile, with more incidences of twin and triplet fawns, and with yearlings going into estrus early. This can actually lead to an even greater population of deer in the hunted areas in years to come.

And because there are no physical barriers between neighborhoods, there's no guarantee that reducing the herd in a "hot spot" would not encourage greater numbers of urban deer to migrate to those areas where food is now plentiful because of the reduced competition.

The people who are pushing for an urban bowhunt are asking City Council to do their dirty work for them: to sanction the killing of deer that they could be dealing with themselves if they were willing to get their hands dirty and plant deer-resistant plants, erect deer-proof fences, investigate deer repellents and practice tolerance.

The deer haters are asking for the city's police department to be stressed as it responds to possible complaints and protests to an urban deer hunt and ensures the safety of our citizens. They are asking for Morgantown residents to live with bowhunters in their neighborhoods — to accept a lure-and-execute pogrom that many find reprehensible.

Those opposed to an urban deer hunt are asking City Council for nothing but compassion and tolerance, which have no price tag.

mon solutions.

This template forces that kind of discussion, requiring interest groups that prefer pursuing their own goals to think about mutual answers.

The president may be tempted to federalize this issue, which has been his way on other issues (see taking over GM and creating national school standards), and some on the left would prefer the feds do all the planning.

Here in Texas, there is even a lawsuit aimed at getting the feds to allocate water rights in Central Texas.

I can see why Washington may need to mediate water disputes between states, but telling folks in every state how much water they should use? Talk about big brother.

Obama should resist that and start pushing states to think ahead. No use waiting around to look backward at this problem, too.

Government's stimulus spending well spent on schools

BY HEATHER NICHOLS-HAINING

Everyone's been touting stimulus as the way out of the economic crisis, but nobody can decide what we're supposed to stimulate and how.

Do we stimulate our economy via massive bailouts to corporations that are "too big to fail," or do we spend the money right here in Morgantown on our local economy, which is too important to fail?

Morgantown is taking the local route by funding schools and proving that our ongoing commitment to our youth is one way out of our nation's financial crisis. Not only are we protecting our economy, but the recent approvals to increase funding for both University High School and the Cheat Lake schools, as well as schools in Marion and Preston counties, are much needed, as any high schooler will tell you.

After the embarrassing near-meltdown of the new UHS only a few years ago, it is past time for the state to dedicate more funding to our schools. With a stagnating national economy, we cannot afford to do otherwise.

It seems that in times of trouble, it is our children who are the first to suffer from budget cuts, and West

Virginia's already underfunded education system can hardly withstand more of this strategy. Luckily, we are ensuring the vitality of our community by promising both quality education and responsible stimulation of our local economy.

The most important economist involved in helping the United States recover from the Great

GUEST COMMENTARY

Depression reminded Americans of the importance of community spending in times of crises, such as today.

Though he understood the temptation to save money, reduce taxes and cut programs, John Maynard Keynes also understood that slashing programs could not stimulate local economies. The whole reason for depressions in the first place is that people simply stop spending. Stores stop selling their products, people lose their jobs, and depressions grind on. Keynes recognized the need to spend in order to stop the stagnation of the economy.

This is much easier said than done, especially in times like today, where money is hard to come by. Keynes knew this and provided a few suggestions for implementing his ideas. His first recommendation is that the communities spend money, even via deficit spending if necessary. Spending money stimulates the economy, creates jobs and provides opportunity to continuously improve our town.

If we don't make the commitment to our local economy, the alternative is to let the giant corporations take huge risks with the knowledge that our tax dollars will bail them out, all in the name of "stimulating our economy."

People across the political spectrum agree that stimulating our economy is necessary, especially in the midst of a recession, but what's at stake is whether the stimulus should go to local communities or to the corporations who are responsible for the economic downturn in the first place.

Spending the money locally is certainly better for our local economy and can also provide long-term benefits by investing in our local institutions.

Renovating Morgantown's schools will have the short-term benefit of employing more people, from construction workers to engineers to teachers, and the long-term benefit of providing better education to our youth. More jobs means more people with fatter wallets. This will stimulate more spending so we can keep our economy alive and thriving as we fight this recession.

Keynes would even go a step further and call for full employment in Morgantown. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, Morgantown has a 7.4 percent unemployment rate (compared to the national average in our metropolises of 10.4 percent).

While we have been applauded for our ability to weather the financial crisis and the recession better than many towns, there's certainly room for improvement. Getting the increased funding for our schools means our town will be one step closer to employment for everyone, and one step closer to a healthier town. Meanwhile, our education system can only get better as we dedicate resources to our youth.

Morgantown has been hailed as one of the cities in the country best equipped to handle the financial crisis.

This is largely possible because we are willing to take strong, bold steps to protect our city's economic future.

It seems that government spending is unavoidable to get out of this crisis. The question is, can we afford to keep bailing out big corporations, or should we dedicate our stimulus efforts to our own local youth?

Euro woes: Top fund manager offers perspective

Of Mutual Interest
TREVOR DELANEY
AP Personal Finance Editor

Europe once offered relative safety to investors with an international appetite. Lately, however, the seemingly familiar terrain has become shaky ground. Emerging markets in South America and Asia seem stable by comparison. Blame the debt crisis in Greece, which threatens to ripple across the Atlantic. There's fear that another credit crunch could hammer European and U.S. banks, and hinder our economic recovery. Indeed, the stock market took another tumble Friday, and it's clear the recent volatility is here to stay awhile. Simon Hallett, chief investment officer of Harding Loevner, knows a thing or two about international markets. The nearly 30 year investment industry veteran manages two highly-rated mutual funds, Harding Loevner International Equity (HLMNX), and Harding Loevner Emerging Markets (HLEMX). His firm manages more than $7.3 billion, mostly in international stocks, in both developed and emerging markets. Below are excerpts from an interview with Hallett:

Q: With all the discussion about Greece and the decline of the euro, what's on your mind?
A: All that we're seeing now in Europe is a kind of a ripple effect from what began here three years ago. We wrote to our mutual fund shareholders in October, and talked about the twin big risks that the world faced. One is the risk of higher inflation resulting from the massive expansion of monetary supplies. That helped finance the other big risk: the contraction in assets that came as a result of terrible lending by the banks. So there's this kind of tradeoff between inflationary pressures in the future, and massive deflationary pressures now. We don't know what policy is going to enable us to steer between these two monsters. There is a tremendous risk of policy errors at a time when government involvement is much much greater. But we basically said, deflationary pressures are the ones that are going to win out over the coming years, and that has some implications for the kind of companies in which we should invest. Q: What can we expect now?

A: We're seeing a contraction in bank assets because they made stupid loans. And equity markets, in particular, seem to be very short-sighted about where the strains are going to emerge next. Governments in Europe have too much leverage. Not just in terms of their balance sheets, but also in terms of their unfunded commitments, such as welfare benefits, and unemployment benefits. In order to fix the credit problems that the banks have, governments have to generate more revenue, so they have to push tax rates up and that threatens the economic growth. So I think we're going to continue seeing strains on government finances, strains on the finances on anybody who has too much debt. Q: What kind of companies can best operate in this kind of environment?
A: Our philosophy is to make sure that balance sheets are strong, cash flow is strong, that management is capable, and that the competitive position is invulnerable — or at least as strong as you can possibly assure. And that this is the kind of company that can eke out fairly modest amounts of growth wherever they can find it. They're not reliant upon very strong economies. So in some ways I think the classic kinds of companies are like Nestle. Q: What do you like about Nestle?

A: We've owned Nestle for 21 years — not always quite in the same amounts, but it's been a constant in our portfolio since the fund began. Then there's Air Liquide, the French industrial gas company. These are the kind of companies that rarely get the attention of markets on a short-term basis. The 20-year return from Nestle stock — the compounded annual return including dividends, after paying taxes on the dividends — is 13.8 percent. It's better than all our portfolios, it's much better than the markets. Our whole style is about trying not to get over-excited and trying to make sure that we can take advantage of the fact that companies like that are never exciting in the short-run tend to be underpriced.

The long and the short of it

Long-short funds offer regular investors a way to invest in hedge-fund-like strategies. These funds can go "long," which essentially means betting on the price of something to rise. Or they can "short," which involves betting something will fall. The category has lagged behind vanilla stock and bond funds over the past decade. But Oliver Pursche, co-portfolio manager of the GMG Defensive Beta fund, says these strategies can help minimize volatility.

Why would I want to invest in a fund with a similar philosophy to hedge funds, which have suffered some high-profile blow-ups?

Unlike hedge funds, we don't try to place bets in terms of short-term market direction. And we don't use leverage. So this is a much more conservative approach. If you're a retired investor who's looking to be invested in the markets, is concerned with market volatility and is reading about various things in the world that are giving you concern, the ability to be out of the market (by going mostly to cash) or being short the market seems an attractive alternative to being in a mutual fund that by rule and prospectus has to be long only. As with any investment, no one should put all their investments in this one fund.

But you see it as a big chunk of someone's portfolio?

We consider it a core holding. To us, that means up to 20 percent of total holdings, because the fund is designed to be diversified including stocks, bonds, commodities and currency hedging. Here's where that's important to you: A large American firm, let's say PepsiCo, who gathers more than half their revenues and earnings overseas hedges their currencies. The reason they do that is they want to maintain a relatively smooth income flow. The same risks hold true for any fund or investor who has international exposure.

A great example of that is our European equity exposure. By being long dollar (essentially betting that the dollar will rise against the euro) to offset the currency risk in our European exposure, we didn't suffer that 13 to 14 percent decline in the euro year to date. And if you take out the currency risk, European stocks have not done that bad at all.

If you're a retail investor with $50,000 or $100,000 to invest, you don't have access to currency hedging, you don't have access to the carry trade. There are a number of scary sounding but fundamentally important investment strategies that we were unable to access for our clients in many cases, so we launched this mutual fund so we could implement these strategies for our clients.

How are you invested now? We're slightly overweight stocks; about 45 percent of the portfolio is in U.S. stocks. About 25 percent is long commodities. We're about 20 percent fixed income — all short-term bond, mostly Treasury.

What kind of stocks do you like? Global infrastructure, rebuilding and expansion. To us, there are two potential scenarios: 1) the economy is back on track, in which case private enterprises will spend a lot on infrastructure, which will affect base metals and infrastructure-related stocks, such as Caterpillar, Tyco. Scenario 2) is that the economy doesn't recover, in which case governments around the world are going to spend a lot of money to create jobs and stimulate the economies. The way they're going to do that, because it's the most efficient, is to create construction jobs.

What are you short now? We're technically short on the euro by being long dollar. We were short the 20-year Treasury. However, as the Greek debt crisis developed, we eliminated that position, because it fundamentally changed our outlook on interest rates.

Dow30 Stocks

The blue-chip average fell for the third week in a row. It saw its heaviest losses Friday, when it lost 323 points following a weaker-than-expected report on jobs. Companies whose fortunes are closely tied to the global economy — such as raw materials maker DuPont — were among the biggest decliners. Disney bucked the trend. Shares inched up after the company's CEO, Bob Iger, said bookings at its resorts are increasing.

25 Best Funds One Year

Funds that focus on real estate remain among the top performers in the past year. Pimco Real Estate Real Return Strategy (PRRSX) was the best among these. A gold fund from Tocqueville (TGLDX) is also among the best funds. It is benefiting as gold prices have climbed 8 percent in the year-to-date. Gold prices are gaining because investors have grown anxious about the global economic recovery. They are seeking gold because they believe the metal will always hold its value, even if other investments, such as stocks, may not.

What we think before retirement

To figure out how big your retirement nest egg needs to be, you first need to figure out how much you'll spend each year. Many of us fail that first step.

Most people say they expect their spending to drop after they enter retirement, according to a survey by the Employee Research Benefit Institute. But, in reality, about half of retirees say they end up spending the same amount or even more.

That means people may not be saving enough to pay for their retirements.

Some costs will go away with your job, such as those for commuting, work clothes or other employment-related responsibilities. But other costs may rise, such as health care, retirees told the Employee Research Benefit Institute.

If you want to finally travel and see the world, that adds costs as well.

One rule of thumb says retirees can withdraw 4 percent of their nest egg during the first year of their retirement. The withdrawal amount can go up with inflation in following years, though it also should likely go down if the stock market takes a beating. That means someone who hopes to withdraw $40,000 a year would need a $1 million nest egg, assuming no Social Security, pension or other such benefits.

INDUSTRY FOCUS

Oil and gas

Oil and gas is the worst-performing industry of the past year. That's partly due to worries about the effects of government debt troubles in Europe. If the problems spread, that could derail the global economic recovery. That, in turn, could hurt demand for raw materials. Futures prices for natural gas have fallen 18 percent this year, while oil prices have fallen 12 percent. But oil and gas stocks are also dropping on concerns about fallout from BP's Gulf of Mexico oil spill, which occurred on April 20 after a rig exploded. BP shares fell 13 percent in the holiday-shortened week. Shares of Halliburton, which was in charge of sealing the well before it ruptured, dropped 7 percent.

The MainEvent For the week of June 7

STILL HAPPY

The stock market's miserable May didn't dampen the spirits of Americans.

Economists expect a Friday report to show that Americans feel a little better about their finances today than a month ago. If they are correct, it could reaffirm faith in the economic recovery.

Stock investors and some economists have begun to doubt the recovery, worried that debt woes in Europe could derail improvements. They sent the S&P 500 index down 8.2 percent in May.

But the job market is improving, which should help buoy sentiment. The country has enjoyed five straight months of net job growth. The unemployment rate dipped to 9.7 percent in May, from 9.9 percent.

The University of Michigan's consumer sentiment survey ask households whether they feel better or worse off versus a year ago, as well as whether they think it's a good or bad time to buy a stove, television or other big-ticket item. People are more likely to answer "yes" when they feel comfortable in their job.

The sentiment measure has held relatively steady through 2010, after rising from its nadir in late 2008.

DEVELOPING ANNOYANCE

Developing economies around the world are still growing, sometimes too fast. The typical response is to hike interest rates, in hopes of preventing overheating. But emerging markets "once again are watching a blowup take place in the developed world and wondering what the fallout will be for their economies," JPMorgan economists wrote in a recent report. Now, instead of Lehman Brothers' collapse, struggles by European governments to keep current on their debt payments are worrying global economies. In their wake, emerging markets will put a hold on hiking rates. That could lead to a stronger dollar versus the developing countries' currencies.

LUXE REWARDS

Holding back is so 2009. The majority of wealthy Americans say they no longer feel guilty about buying luxury goods, according to a survey by American Express and Harrison Group. A year ago, 54 percent of them felt guilty. The survey covers the wealthiest 10 percent, those with more than $100,000 in annual discretionary income. The shift was on full display this past earnings season, when Tiffany (TIF) and Nordstrom (JWN) reported stronger earnings. Middle- and lower-class Americans, meanwhile, are more circumspect. The bottom 90 percent mostly say they will spend the same or less this year, again foregoing spending on luxuries.

SPRINGING INTO A CORRECTION

Emerging-market stocks have struggled this spring, dropping nearly 12 percent between April 15 and May 31. But it's nothing new, notes Citi Investment Research strategist Geoffrey Dennis. Emerging-market stocks suffered drops of more than 10 percent each spring from 2004 through 2006, when they were some of the world's best investments. Emerging-market stocks are considered more volatile than developed-nation stocks, and this is just another example. Dennis expects emerging-market stocks to continue their upward trend, and he says this past spring is just another short-term correction.

OneYearAgo

June 10, 2009 — MILWAUKEE — Brown-Forman, which makes Jack Daniel's Tennessee Whiskey and other liquors, says its fiscal fourth-quarter profit fell 20 percent, mostly hurt by costs related to job cuts and distributor inventory reductions.

The recession was cutting into drinking, and Brown-Forman had just announced an effort to trim 6 percent of its work force, cut discretionary spending and make other efforts for total savings of $15 million to $25 million for the fiscal year.

The Louisville-based company said it earned $79.6 million in the quarter, down from $99.1 million in the same period a year earlier.

But in September, the Louisville-based company posted a 38 percent spike in first-quarter profit as the job cuts and lower advertising spending offset sluggish sales for such key brands as Jack Daniel's Tennessee Whiskey and Finlandia vodka. The liquor company also touted robust quarterly sales growth for its ready-to-drink cocktails, an effort to adapt as more people stayed home to drink rather than go to bars and restaurants.

For the first nine months of the fiscal year, Brown-Forman reported sales gains from its ready-to-drink brands and growth for Gentleman Jack, Jack Daniel's and J. Jimador. That was somewhat offset by sales declines in Southern Comfort and some other brands, and the company said it was still concerned about consumers' spending habits and increased competition.

Skin cancer drug shows promise in major study

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Researchers have scored the first big win against melanoma, the deadliest form of skin cancer. An experimental drug significantly improved survival in a major study of people with very advanced disease.

The results, reported Saturday at a cancer conference, left doctors elated.

"We have not had any therapy that has prolonged survival" until now, said Dr. Lynn Schuchter, of the Abramson Cancer Center at the University of Pennsylvania, a skin cancer specialist with no role in the study or ties to the drug's maker.

The drug, ipilimumab, works by helping the immune system fight tumors. The federal Food and Drug Administration has pledged a quick review, and doctors think the drug could be available by the end of this year.

"People are going to have a lot of hope and want this drug, and it's not on their doctors' shelves," although some may be able to get it through special programs directly from its maker, Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., Schuchter said.

Melanoma is the most serious form of skin cancer. Last year in the United States, there were about 68,720 new cases and 8,650 deaths from the disease. Worldwide, more than 50,000 people die of melanoma each year.

"The incidence is rising faster than any other cancer," said one of the study's leaders, Dr. Stephen Hodi of Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston. "When it spreads to vital organs, it's almost always fatal."

The study involved 676 people around the world with advanced, inoperable melanoma who had already tried other treatments — a very grim situation. They were given one of three treatments: ipilimumab by itself, with another immune-stimulating treatment, or the immune-stimulating treatment alone.

After two years, 24 percent of those given the drug alone or in combination were alive, versus 14 percent of those given just the immune-stimulating treatment.

Average survival was 10 months with ipilimumab versus just over 6 months for the others, which worked out to a 67 percent improvement in survival for those on the drug, said one of the study's leaders, Dr. Steven O'Day of the Angeles Clinic and Research Institute in Los Angeles.

Doctors hope the drug can provide more benefit if given earlier in the course of the disease and to less sick patients.

Ten percent to 15 percent of patients on ipilimumab had serious side effects related to the drug's actions on the immune system. Most were treatable with high doses of steroids, but 14 deaths were thought to be related to the treatment. That's still far fewer than deaths due to the cancer.

The study was funded by Bristol-Myers and Medarex Inc., a company that co-developed the drug and was bought by Bristol-Myers last year. A spokeswoman said Bristol-Myers has not yet set a price for the drug, but similar treatments for other cancers cost several thousand dollars a month or more.

Results were reported at the American Society of Clinical Oncology's annual conference in Chicago and published online by the New England Journal of Medicine.

Jimmy Buffett laments oil spilling in paradise

Associated Press

PENSACOLA BEACH, Fla. — The timing might be a bit off for tourists hoping to waste away in Margaritaville. But that doesn't bother Jimmy Buffett.

The singer — whose tunes are as much a part of life in this beach town as fried grouper sandwiches, Land Shark beer and the U.S. Navy's Blue Angels — is planning to open a 162-room Margaritaville Hotel in a week.

As tar balls came ashore Saturday from an oil plume shooting out of the floor of the Gulf of Mexico, Buffett said he had no plans to delay the opening.

"This will pass," he said as he walked along the city's beachfront and fishing pier with Fla. Gov. Charlie Crist.

Curious beachgoers mobbed the duo in a frenzy rarely seen on the normally laid-back beach, snapping pictures and laughing as Crist and Buffett spent about an hour doing interviews and talking.

Buffett told fans he often went to Pensacola Beach while growing up nearby in Alabama. He said his favorite memories are of sunsets in the fall. He joked that he also enjoys the sunrises — but usually sleeps through them.

Buffett said the community will get through the crisis by pulling together. He wants people in the area to know that he's there for them as the oil encroaches on their leisure and livelihoods.

If Buffett's good for anything, it's "helping people forget their troubles for a couple of hours," the "Cheeseburger in Paradise" singer said.

Buffett's $50 million hotel sits on the Gulf, on land where Hurricane Ivan destroyed a previous hotel in 2004.

Long-term jobless face tough odds

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — If you lose your job these days, it's worth scrambling to find a new one — fast.

After six months of unemployment, your chances of landing work dwindle.

The proportion of people jobless for six months or more has accelerated in the past year and now makes up 46 percent of the unemployed. That's the highest percentage on records dating to 1948. By late summer or early fall, they are expected to make up half of all jobless Americans.

Economists said those out of work for six months or more risk becoming less and less employable. Their skills can erode, their confidence falter, their contacts dry up. Their growing ranks also will keep pressure on Congress to keep extending jobless benefits, which now run for up to 99 weeks.

Overall, the economy has created a net 982,000 jobs this year. But for Jeff Martinez and the record 6.76 million others who have struck out for six months or more, their struggles are getting worse, not better.

Martinez, 40, a salesman in

The proportion of people jobless for six months or more has accelerated in the past year and now makes up 46 percent of the unemployed. That's the highest percentage on records dating to 1948.

Washington, D.C., said he's logged more than 200 interviews in the past three years. Decked out in a dark navy suit and Burberry tie, Martinez projects drive and a zest for deal-making. And yet the most urgent deal of his career — finding a job — eludes him.

"You have days where you feel motivated and hopeful and optimistic," he said. "Then there are other days, you really lose the faith and think, 'I'm never going to get another job. Ever.'"

What's causing the rising ranks of the long-term jobless to exceed the pace of other recessions?

Mainly, it's the depth and duration of the job-slashing this time. Since the recession began in December 2007 through May this year, a net 7.4 million jobs have vanished. The unemployment rate has surged nearly 5 percentage points: From 5 percent in December 2007 to 9.7 percent in May.

By contrast, in the last severe recession, the rate rose less sharply over a shorter period: From 7.2 percent in July 1981 to 10.8 percent at the end of 1982.

Lawrence Mishel, president of the Economic Policy Institute, points to the "sheer scale of the falloff in demand for workers" this time. It's left more people out of work for longer stretches. And it's intensified competition for each opening.

"It's a cruel game of musical chairs," Mishel said.

To lower the unemployment rate from the current 9.7 percent to a more normal 6 percent would require roughly a net 15 million new jobs by the end of 2016, estimates Brian Bethune, chief U.S. financial economist at IHS

Global Insight.

Few think that's likely. One factor behind the growing proportion of the long-term unemployed is the erosion of their workplace skills — or employers' perception of it. It's hard to find work in a tight job market when your skills are seen as stale.

For some occupations in particular, such as computer technicians or accountants, people jobless for months can lose pace with technological changes or federal rules.

Other reasons for the growing proportion of the long-term unemployed:

■ Jobs wiped out by the Great Recession that aren't coming back. In industries like home construction, manufacturing and retail, fewer workers will be needed even after the economy has fully recovered.

■ The breadth of the recession, which struck every area of the country, makes it harder for job hunters to move to another region in expectation of finding a job. Complicating the matter, the housing bust made it difficult for people to sell their homes and move elsewhere to take a job, economists say.

G-20 chiefs agree to curb deficits

Associated Press

BUSAN, South Korea — World financial leaders pledged Saturday to push ahead on curbing deficits and crafting financial reforms to safeguard the global recovery, including making banks bear much of the burden for government bailouts.

As expected, the finance ministers and central banks gathered in this southern port city finessed what some said were at times heated differences over how to reshape financial regulation and build safety nets for countries stricken by debt crises.

The Group of 20 welcomed measures taken by the European Union, the European Central Bank and the IMF, including a $1 trillion bailout, to help countries cope with the fallout from unsustainably high debt.

"All of us have a strong interest in seeing those programs succeed in restoring confidence," U.S. Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner told reporters after the meetings ended.

Long-term, sustainable growth will depend on rebalancing growth, he said.

"The United States is moving aggressively to fix things we got wrong and to strengthen our economic fundamentals," Geithner said, noting that as Americans boost savings and investment and consume less, other countries will need to generate more growth.

"All the countries recognize the basic reality that the U.S. is reforming and adjusting and that for the world to grow at its potential it is going to require that growth outside the U.S. will come more from domestic demand than in the past," he said.

Europe's sovereign debt crisis — and Hungary's warning this week that it risks a Greek-style meltdown of its own — sharpened worries that the global economy could succumb to another downturn following the one sparked by the collapse of U.S. investment bank Lehman Brothers in 2008.

The precarious levels of indebtedness among many countries also has driven home the need to restore what in G-20 speak is called "fiscal sustainability," participants said.

"There is a significant change of tone in the language that the G-20 use on the issue of fiscal sustainability and there is a very explicit reference in the communique to those countries with serious fiscal challenges needing to accelerate the pace of consolidation," said British Chancellor George Osborne.

While the euro fell below $1.20 for the first time in more than four years Friday in reaction to Hungary's woes, European officials insisted the problem was being overstated.

"Hungary has made serious progress in consolidating its public finances over the last couple of years," Olli Rehn, Europe's commissioner for economic and monetary affairs, told reporters. Any talk of a risk of default "is widely exaggerated," he said.

Despite qualms over the long-term prospects for European currency unity, ECB President Jean-Claude Trichet defended the euro, calling it a "solid currency, a credible currency, a currency that has kept its value in terms of price stability."

The talks in Busan prepared the agenda for a meeting of G-20 leaders, including President Barack Obama, in Canada later this month.

In the wake of the global recession, the G-20, which includes both advanced and emerging economies, has taken over from the Group of Seven industrialized nations as a key priorities-setting group for the global economy.

The finance ministers are working on reforms of financial regulations to help prevent the kinds of financial meltdowns that contributed to the recession, the worst global slump since World War II.

While there seems to be strong consensus on the broad strokes of what needs to be done, the difficulty is in technical details for reforming financial regulations, including how banks and other financial institutions might bear the burden for government bailouts and other interventions.

Experimental drug helps cancer patients with a certain gene

Therapy for those with lung cancer shrinks tumors

Associated Press

CHICAGO — It's way too soon to declare success, but an experimental drug for lung cancer patients with a certain gene showed extraordinary promise in early testing, doctors reported at a cancer conference on Saturday.

More than 90 percent of the 82 patients in a study saw their tumors shrink after two months on the drug, Pfizer Inc.'s crizotinib, researchers reported.

Doctors had expected only about 10 percent of these very sick patients to respond to the drug, according to one of the study's leaders, Dr. Yung-Jue Bang of the Seoul National University College of Medicine in South Korea.

These were people with advanced disease, including some whose cancers had spread to the brain. They had already tried an average of three other drugs. Responses to crizotinib have lasted up to 15 months so far, and the drug has been rushed into late-stage testing, Bang said.

Many leading cancer specialists, who normally don't get excited until a drug proves effective in large studies against existing treatments, said the research so far on crizotinib was promising.

"It's early, but I'm impressed by it. It looks extremely effective," said Dr. Roy Herbst, lung cancer chief at the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston. He has consulted for makers of other lung cancer drugs but not this one.

Dr. Alice Shaw, the Massachusetts General Hospital doctor who is leading a larger study of crizotinib, agreed.

"I don't think there is false hope. The data are so strong," she said.

The drug targets a gene that promotes tumor growth and is found in about 4 percent of lung cancers, especially among younger, non-smokers. This small percentage is still a lot of people: Nearly 220,000 new cases of lung cancer are diagnosed each year in the United States alone, and it is the world's top cancer killer.

That means that up to 10,000 people in the U.S. annually could benefit, said Dr. Mark Kris, a lung cancer specialist at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York, who has consulted for Pfizer.

Two other gene-targeted treatments, Tarceva and Iressa, help about 20,000 lung cancer patients annually in the U.S.

"We're chipping away at large numbers of patients," and future gene discoveries should add to the number helped, Herbst said.

The gene targeted by crizotinib was discovered in 2007, Kris noted.

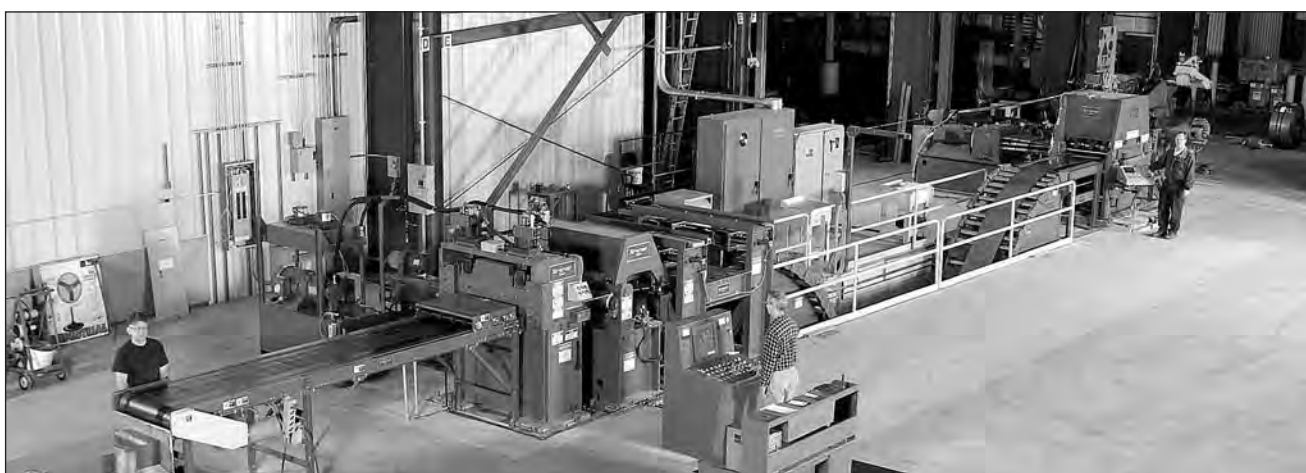

"Once we understand a cancer cell, we can come up with a treatment very quickly," he said.

No show-stopping side effects were seen in the first study — half of patients on crizotinib had diarrhea, nausea or vomiting — but much larger tests are needed to establish safety.

Even more testing is needed to see if the drug is more effective than existing treatments, how long any benefits last, and whether it improves survival — not just shrinks tumors.

Pfizer sponsored the study and has already launched bigger studies to compare crizotinib to current standard treatments. The company hopes to seek federal Food and Drug Administration approval for the drug next year.

The study was presented Saturday at a meeting in Chicago of the American Society of Clinical Oncology.

The new upgrade to Greer Steel's Braner CTL line, which will extend its length capability, has been installed in the company's facility.

Greer Steel announces facility upgrade to Braner line

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Greer Steel announced the completion of a new upgrade that extends the length capability of the company's Braner CTL line. While previously able to handle lengths of up to 146 inches, the line can now process lengths up to 160 inches.

The width, gauge and coil weight capabilities remain unchanged. The high-speed line from Braner USA features a 17-roll flattener with a backer assembly and is capable of processing 72 inches of cold rolled coils up to 30,000 pounds x 30 inches wide in gauges up from .025 to .220.

Company officials said the upgrade was performed to meet the expanding needs of Greer's current customer base and will serve those customers well into the future.

"Our CTL line was originally installed in answer to our customers' demands for material that runs more efficiently on their lines and therefore, provides increases in parts per pound and in overall productivity. Adding length capability to our line simply adds to the benefits of utilizing the line and underscores the company's long-term commitment to our customers," said Greer's Marketing Vice President Bob Friend.

PACE offering new service for documents

PACE Enterprises (formerly PACE TEC) of Morgantown has entered a new line of business: Secure document shredding and recycling. This will allow the agency to grow into a statewide organization.

"We are going to be serving customers in Wheeling and Charleston, in addition to our traditional customer base along Interstate 79 between the state line and Fairmont," CEO Greg Morris said.

The process utilizes technology to ensure total security for a customer's secrets. A customer places documents into a locked console that is supplied free of charge. Then, trucks are deployed to locations based on a customized schedule that meets customer needs. Materials (in secure locked containers) are taken by trained, insured and bonded drivers in a locked truck to a secure shredding facility in Morgantown. There, documents are co-mingled in preparation for shredding (a security feature to ensure that final baled material cannot be reconstructed) and contaminants, such as metal, are removed. The documents are shred and baled. After being placed in 1,500-pound bales, the material is released to a paper company for pulverizing and recycling.

PACE Shredding is a member of the Secure Document Alliance and the National Association for Information Destruction.

Israel seizes Gaza-bound aid ship

Associated Press

JERUSALEM — A defiant Israel enforced its 3-year-old blockade of Hamas-ruled Gaza on Saturday, with naval commandos swiftly commandeering a Gaza-bound aid vessel carrying an Irish Nobel laureate and other activists and forcing it to head to an Israeli port instead.

The bloodless takeover stood in marked contrast to a deadly raid of another Gaza aid ship this week. However, it was unlikely to halt snowballing international outrage and demands that Israel lift or at least loosen the devastating closure that confines 1.5 million Palestinians to a small sliver of land and only allows in basic humanitarian goods.

For now, the confrontations at sea are likely to continue.

The organizers of Saturday's sail said they planned to dispatch as many as three more ships in coming months and that four captains already have volunteered for the missions.

"What Israel needs to understand is that nothing is accomplished with force," said Greta Berlin of the Cyprus-based Free Gaza group, which sent the latest aid vessel, the Rachel Corrie.

Israel said it would block any attempt to reach Gaza by sea, in order to prevent weapons from reaching the Iranian-backed Islamic militant group.

At the same time, Israel signaled Saturday it is considering easing the blockade, although officials provided no details. Israel and Egypt closed Gaza's borders after Hamas seized the territory three years ago from Western-backed Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas.

Bomb at Afghan governor's office wounds 14

KANDAHAR, Afghanistan — A bomb exploded Saturday outside the provincial governor's office in the Afghan city of Kandahar, killing one policeman and wounding at least 14 civilians, officials said.

The attack reflects deteriorating security in the largest city in the country's volatile south — also the Taliban's spiritual home — where NATO is preparing for a major operation seen as key to combating the insurgency. Gov. Tooryalai Wesa was not in his office at the time.

The bombing also comes a day after a national peace conference in Kabul boosted President Hamid Karzai's plans to seek negotiations with the Taliban in a bid to end the nearly nine-year war.

Kandahar city police Chief Sardar Mohammad Zazai said the explosives were strapped to a bicycle on the street outside the compound where the governor lives and works.

Germany, Russia: We support sanction

MESEBERG, Germany — Germany and Russia declared Saturday that the five world powers negotiating with Iran support a fresh set of international sanctions, and Chancellor Angela Merkel said they could pass soon.

Russian President Dmitry Medvedev said at a news conference with Merkel that "agreement on the sanctions exists," despite the fact that "nobody wants sanctions."

"We hope the voice of the international community will be heard by the Iranian leadership," Medvedev said through the official German translator.

Merkel said sanctions could be passed by the United Nations Security Council "in the near future."

Murder suspect interrogated in Peru

LIMA, Peru — The lone suspect in the disappearance of U.S. teen Natalee Holloway was paraded — moist-eyed and looking stunned — before reporters Saturday as Peruvians denounced him and detectives began interrogating him about the murder of Stephany Flores, a Lima student.

Joran van der Sloot arrived at criminal police headquarters in a brown Interpol SUV and was escorted across an auditorium of shouting, shutter-snapping journalists three times.

Wearing a green bullet-proof vest, his hands handcuffed behind him, the husky 22-year-old Dutchman stared straight ahead and didn't respond to reporters' questions or even make eye contact.

Outside the police headquarters, seven Indian shamans in brightly colored ponchos repeatedly stabbed a cloth doll representing van der Sloot in a "spiritual punishment" ritual.

"We're punishing him so that all the forces of evil are purged," one shouted.

Sequel worse than the first 'SATC' movie

BECAUSE I TEND TO CREATE my own reality, based very little on actual facts and/or lessons learned from past experiences, I have a longstanding history of making pretty questionable decisions.

Spending my hard-earned money two years ago to see the first "Sex and the City" movie — which I knew would only disappoint — is but one example.

Spending even more of it to see the atrocious, insulting sequel last weekend — even after the vomit-inducing trailer — was yet another.

The thing is, it's not as though I didn't know it was going to be bad. I knew full well that I was going to walk out of this film wanting to erase the very memory of it from my mind. After all, I have access to an entertainment wire that feeds, among other things, movie reviews straight to my computer. So I had seen — and read, and taken to heart — all of the nasty stuff critics were saying.

Like this tidbit from The Washington Post's Ann Hornaday, for instance: "An enervated, crass and gruesomely caricatured trip to nowhere [that] seems conceived primarily to find new and more cynical ways to abuse the loyalty of its audience."

Or this one, from Bill Clark, of The Balcony: "At this point it's virtually impossible to escape the cruel irony that 'Sex and the City,' the show, ended when it did so that it wouldn't become what this movie is."

And those were kind of the nice ones.

As our girl-date approached, I took the liberty of texting my friend some of the more painful lines I'd read repeated in the reviews — the worst of which I can't share here, family newspaper and all that. Suffice it to say that if we thought the "Louise Vuitton" and "Mexicoma" puns from the first movie were as bad as it got, well, we were in for a surprise. "Inter-friend-tion" funny to anyone out there? Yeah, it wasn't to us, either.

What makes it all so infuriating is that the show was actually about something. Something no one had really touched on before — the importance of female friendships, of independence, of heartbreak and success. With a few sweet shoes thrown in for good measure.

Now, thanks to terrible writing and what can only be excused as box-office-bling-induced blindness, it's been reduced to unfunny jokes, archetypes and costume changes.

Interestingly enough, while writing this column, I decided to go back and see what I'd said about the first film.

"It's like the writers purposely took everything that made the series good and threw it out the window, only to replace it with unlikely situations, painful puns and 42 fashion montages."

Sound familiar? Clearly, I had it coming. I probably should have re-read that before seeing this sequel.

Not that it would have made any difference. I always knew I would subject myself to it again.

But mark my words, Michael Patrick King. You too, Sarah Jessica Parker, Kim Cattrall, Cynthia Nixon and Kristen Davis: I'm through being a sucker.

This time, I've learned my lesson.

Let's just hope you all have, too, and there will never be a "SATC3."

Like many people, Sam Leizear and Laura Jones have pets. But Sam Leizear's and Laura Jones' pets aren't like many other people's.

Whether it began on purpose, or with little more than a firm tug of a heartstring, the couple has become the savior of multiple special-needs animals through the years — as many as 60 in their 20 years together.

There was Annie aka Munchie, a blind, deaf, insulin-dependent diabetic doggie. A little kitten, Tiva, who was suffering from cerebellar hyperplasia, which caused her to have tremors her entire life. A dog named Dizzy, 9 years old and dumped in a shelter because she'd started having accidents in the house. A blind doggie named Mr. Bumble who had fallen out of a two-story window and suffered several injuries before being taken away from his owners by animal control authorities.

Ozzy, a 12-year-old Yorkie with no teeth and bowed legs. His mother, Nisha, rescued from an atrocious backyard breeding operation that bred her so often, her internal organs had collapsed. Misty, a beagle mix who was born blind. Dolly, a 15-year-old poodle with no teeth, who overcame breast cancer.

popped completely out of its socket when he was found. And, of course, Faith — visually the most memorable of all the dogs they've fostered in their lives — who has no back legs, but walks unaided, balancing on her two front ones. She was born under a pile of trash under a broken-down trailer, and some-

IF YOU ARE THINKING about adopting a special needs pet — be it a pet with behavioral or physical issues — Dr. Kelley Owen of Hillcrest Veterinary Clinic urges you to take into consideration your financial situation (vet bills can be pricey, and some special needs pets require extensive and/or ongoing care), your lifestyle (do you have the time and patience for a special needs animal?), and the issue itself (for instance, do you think you would be better equipped to handle a behavioral issue or a physical one? Would you feel comfortable administering medications? Are you willing to accept the fact that a medical issue could possibly mean a shorter time spent with the pet you adopt?)

how, a bit of wire or cord became wound around her back legs. Leizear and Jones don't know whether her back legs were severed, or if she chewed them off to escape her shackles, but eventually, at 12 weeks, she managed to wander out from under the debris, where she was spotted by an animal-loving neighbor, who posted her picture on Petfinder. Which, of course, landed her at the Leizear/Jones house.

"At first we thought, 'Oh there's no way we can do that,' but then we saw her picture and that did it," Laura said.

Faith recently celebrated her 7th birthday.

"She has been an inspiration to not only us, but every other human being who has seen her, and I suspect, a few non-humans as well," Sam said proudly.

Sam and Laura said they aren't sure whether they have chosen their pets, or been chosen by the pets, but said they wouldn't change the experiences they've had for anything — despite the obvious challenges posed adopting special babies such as these.

"Obviously there's a commitment of time, patience and money," Laura said. "But we're a two-income family and we have no children, so we have the money available to do something. But you have to consider, 'Who will take care of my dog if I go on vacation, especially if you adopt a medically dependent dog. One time, we hadn't gone on vacation for two years. You have to be aware. But we love our animals."

Dr. Kelley Owen of Hillcrest Veterinary Clinic on Point Marion Road said it is important to understand both your own limitations and the limitations your potential new special pet may have.

Like Sam and Laura, the biggest things will be "money, time and patience," she said. Also, you need to tailor the special-needs pet's behavioral and/or physical needs to your environment.

Adopting a nervous pet if you have five young children running around? Probably not a good idea. Adopting a pet with a medical condition — heartworm positive, aging and arthritic, or with a heart or liver problem, for instance — if you're strapped for cash? Again, you might want to hold off. Vet bills can be expensive

ADOPTION INFORMATION

If after careful consideration you still feel like you're up to the challenge (and reward) of adopting a special-needs animal, check out these area organizations. Your new best friend may be waiting for you already:

- Monongalia County Canine Adoption Center: <http://www.petfinder.com/shelters/WV105.html> or call (304) 291-7267.
- Animal Friends of North Central West Virginia: <http://www.animalfriendswv.org/> or call 304-290-4PET (4738).

■ Pet Helpers Inc., www.pethelpersinc.org or call 304-672-7387.

■ Preston County Animal Shelter: <http://www.petfinder.com/shelters/prestoncountyanimals.html> or call 304-329-3461.

■ You can also find many different disabled- and special-needs pet rescues on the Web, as well. If you would like to help these special animals, but aren't in the position to adopt at the moment, these rescues always accept donations of money or supplies. Ask to see their wish lists. And consider being a foster parent for an animal in search of a forev— and no, they're not optional.

But, if, like Sam and Laura, you can find room in your home and your heart for an animal with his or her own particular special issues, "it can be one of the most rewarding things you ever do," Owen said. "When you see this dog who has blossomed, and turned into a happy pet again with your care ... To see them, it's one of the best things."

And Sam and Laura couldn't agree more.

"We have learned something from every dog and cat we've ever had," Laura said. "We have learned about the ability to persevere. When we first got Faith, she had night terrors and she would wake up wailing. She has done remarkably well, in terms of warming up to people. So to see her being able to learn to trust after what she went through, well."

"Just seeing them grow and learning to be part of the pack," Sam added. "Knowing they have a good life, but they're mostly giving back to us."

But don't go into it with a hero mentality, or with the idea that your "special" pet will be a novelty act.

"If you're thinking of going to rescue a dog with a disability thinking it will be cute and you can carry it around and pat it on the head, that's the wrong idea," Laura said. "Faith can walk because we have encouraged her to walk. We've worked tirelessly with her. We don't feel sorry for [any of our animals] as much as we are amazed by how much we can learn from them."

Sam said sometimes people learn of their special brood and put the praise in the wrong place. "People see us with our pack and say, 'Oh, you are like guardian angels,'" he said. "But I think, with what they've been through and the fact that they can still learn to trust people, they are the angels."

"You have to be realistic, and you're going to have to be prepared to say goodbye," Laura added, noting that they've adopted several pets who have succumbed to extreme medical issues within a year or two of their adoption. "It's going to be heartwrenching every time. So you have to focus on the life had while they were with you, and the joy they brought."

Downtown decks perfect for summertime weather

It's SUMMERTIME in Morgantown, and that means it's time to sit outside and enjoy the weather with your favorite drink. For those of you without a back deck or front porch — or who just want to go hang out with some friends — it's still easy to do, as Morgantown has a lot of options when it comes to bars with decks.

For now, I'm going to focus on the downtown bars, as there are far too many in the area to fit into one column. If you'd like to know more about the decks in the Cheat Lake area, fellow Bar Buzzer Kevin Hamric did an excellent job describing Cheat Lake bars awhile back, including the decks. You can easily find it in The Dominion Post's online archives.

By far, my favorite deck to sit back and relax on is at the Morgantown Brewing Company (MBC). While MBC is one of my favorite places to visit in general, the deck itself is great because several of the seats allow you to look out on the Mon River. I find it very relaxing to watch the light from the setting sun gleam on the water while having a pint.

MBC has a full menu that you can order from while out on the deck. My personal favorite is the Buffalo chicken sandwich with an 80 shilling Scottish Ale. Another great combination is the kielbasa burger with a Coal City Stout. And in case you haven't heard, the brewpub is now open for lunch at 11 a.m. It offers a full menu, but also a lunch menu that guarantees your food will be ready within 10 minutes. The fish and chips with Anderson's Kettle Bottom Brown is a great lunch treat.

The Brick Yard Pub also has a nice deck on the backside of the bar. It's tucked away in a corner, making it a very cozy spot to sit back and relax. While not one of the largest decks, it is one of the most private if that's what you're looking for on a first date, and want to talk and get to know each other better.

The Brick Yard serves my favorite pizza in town. I like mine with pepperoni, but it's the crust and cheese that really make it my favorite.

Getting a half-yard or full-yard of your favorite beer will also keep you from getting up too often to get another drink.

De Lazy Lizard on High Street has a few deck options to choose from, and is a great choice if you want to go to a club. It has a large back deck, but my favorite is the front deck that faces High Street. It's enclosed enough that it gives a feel of privacy, but allows you to look out at High Street and check out the late night action.

De Lazy Lizard has several specialty bars inside, such as the one for tequila and a beer bar with several domestic and import selections. Even if you're not sure what you're in the mood for, bartenders at any of the bars can help you out.

Another excellent club deck is at Bent Willey's. With tiki torches and speakers set up for music, it would be hard to beat Bent Willey's for an energetic time outside. Different music plays every night — even different styles on the same night sometimes inside. So, the place is sure to have your favorite songs playing sometime during the week.

Bent Willey's has several different drink specials throughout the week, which could help you decide what beverage you'd like to enjoy on the deck. With specials on bourbon, rum, champagne, beer and many shots, choosing what to sip on while out on the deck may be difficult.

Just below Bent Willey's is the Vintage Room, whose deck is by the front entrance. While perhaps more of a porch, it has several tables and is open and roomy, giving a sense of space that allows for comfortable conversation, while still being able to enjoy the music coming from above at Bent Willey's.

The Vintage Room is one of the best places to be in town for martinis, and it has an excellent selection of wines to choose from. There is a full menu with several dishes that you won't find just anywhere, such as mussels, duck breast and wood-fired, brick-oven pizzas.

It's summertime. Visit one of our town's great bars and sit out on the deck. Take some time and enjoy the weather, with a drink and with a view.

Pitt joins World Cup committee

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The United States has added more star power to its bid for the 2018 or 2022 World Cups, putting actor Brad Pitt on the committee trying to bring back soccer's premier event.

Pitt accepted an invitation to join the USA Bid Committee, the group said.

"Soccer is a truly global sport and the opportunity to join the effort to have the U.S. host the world's greatest sporting event again is a great honor," Pitt said in a statement.

The U.S. staged the tournament in 1994. Former President Bill Clinton, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg and comedian Drew Carey also are on the committee.

The U.S. is competing with Australia, England, Russia, Spain-Portugal and Netherlands-Belgium for both tournaments. Japan, Qatar and South Korea are bidding for 2022 only, believing Europe is a lock for 2018 because eight of 24 voters are from that region.

FIFA's executive committee will select the 2018 and 2022 hosts in a vote Dec. 2.

U.S. library honors McCartney for pop music

BY BRETT ZONGKER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When it comes to popular music, it doesn't get much bigger than the tunes Paul McCartney has written and sung in the past five decades with the Beatles and on his own.

McCartney, who has been knighted by the queen of England, was honored Tuesday with Washington's highest award for pop music by the Library of Congress. The Gershwin Prize for Popular Song is named for the U.S. song-writing brothers George and Ira Gershwin, whose collections are housed at the library.

"Some of the songs you write, you don't know where they come from," McCartney said. "So I have to believe in the magic."

The tune for "Yesterday" came to him in a dream, he said. Nobody could place it, so he claimed it as his own. McCartney joked the original lyrics were "Scrambled egg. Oh my baby how I love your legs."

Then he took his guitar and said "Here goes nothing," before he sang the familiar tune for a Washington crowd at a private concert at the library. The audience included House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, Stevie Wonder and comedian Jerry Seinfeld. He also sang an encore of "Blackbird."

The former Beatle says it's very special to win the Gershwin Prize because he grew up listening to music by the Gershwin brothers. Wonder and Paul Simon previously won the Gershwin prize.

Librarian of Congress James Billington said

McCartney made an impact beyond music, "symbolizing and humanizing the global soundscape," and with his activism around the world.

Faced with the Washington press corps, McCartney was quizzed on his inspiration for songwriting, his opinion on whether performers should earn royalties for when their work is played on the radio (he thinks they should) and even got a few autograph requests.

This is McCartney's first major lifetime achievement award from the U.S. government. He was slated to win a Kennedy Center Honor, the nation's top prize for performing artists, in 2002, but backed out because of a scheduling conflict. In 1990, McCartney won the Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award.

Switzerland's highest court cracks down on Texas hold 'em matches

Associated Press

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — There's no skill in Texas hold 'em.

That's the opinion of Switzerland's highest court, which banned tournaments of the high-stakes poker game outside of casinos.

Had the Swiss Supreme Court ruled Wednesday that Texas hold 'em was a game of skill, it would have permitted private competitions to continue.

But it said simple math, tactics and psychology played smaller roles than luck in determining the winner.

The decision will anger fans of the card game, which has enjoyed a flourishing of events in Swiss restaurants, bars and hotels.

Swiss casinos fought for the ban, saying the unregulated matches posed unfair competition.

The ruling doesn't affect poker games among friends, even if money is involved.

The musical tunes that rise above the rest

WHO DO YOU KNOW that will break out into a song and dance routine when life throws her lemons?

Yeah, me neither.

Although I'm somewhat confounded by the wide success of musicals, for the most part, I love them just as much as the next person.

And with a new season of musicals produced by West Virginia Public Theatre coming to the Morgantown Event Center this month, I pondered the reasons why we love musical theater so much. The only thing I can fathom is that there is something about the catchiness of the tunes mingled with the intricate dance steps that just makes us inherently happy. Even when the songs are about something depressing.

Some of my favorite songs are from musicals I grew up with or fell in love with later on in life. Here are some of them:

■ "One Song Glory" from "Rent" — It's funny that while Roger, one of "Rent's" main characters, is contemplating writing that one perfect song, he's actually unknowingly singing it. To me, the song he comes up with in the end can't compare to the beauty of "One Song Glory." The first time I heard it, even from the opening strains, I knew it would leave a lasting impact.

■ "It's the Hard-Knock Life" from "Annie" — Who doesn't think about the movie when they hear "Annie?" And while the performance of this song in the movie was excellent, one of the most memorable was from the national tour's stop here in Morgantown. Combine carefully choreographed bucket-slammings with little girls belting out a really catchy tune, and you've got one of the best musical numbers ever: It's so good even Jay-Z decided to sample it in his song of the same name.

■ "Seize the Day" from "Newsies" — "Newsies" was a Disney-made musical back in the early 1990s about the 1899 newsboys strike against Joseph Pulitzer and William Randolph Hearst. Being in the journalism field, maybe I'm a bit biased, but I think this musical's been passed over and underrated since it hit theaters. All the music is genius, but the one that stands out is the newsies rebel anthem "Seize the Day."

■ "I Dreamed a Dream" from "Les Miserables" — Honestly, I'm not really sure what I can say about this other than it's one of the most beautiful, thrilling and heartwrenching pieces of musical theater I've ever heard. If you haven't heard it, do it now.

■ "Defying Gravity" from "Wicked" — In this epic song about empowerment, Idina Menzel, who played the original Elphaba (aka the Wicked Witch of the West in "Wicked") on stage, sings my favorite version. She exudes power whether she's harmonizing with Kristin Chenoweth's Glinda, speaking softly to try and convince her friend to join her, or if it's when she takes flight with her broom while singing the chorus.

While I might not be inclined to croon these songs while walking down the street or at my desk in the office, I have been known to break out in song while driving. I'm sure that gives other drivers a pretty good show, but, hey, at least they can't hear me.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY PREPARES FOR BOOKLESS LIBRARY

BY LISA M. KRIEGER
San Jose Mercury News (MCT)

SAN JOSE, Calif. — One chapter is closing — and another is opening — as Stanford University moves toward the creation of its first "bookless library."

Box by box, decades of past scholarship are being packed up and emptied from two old libraries, Physics and Engineering, to make way for the future: a smaller but more efficient and largely electronic library that can accommodate the vast, expanding and interrelated literature of Physics, Computer Science and Engineering.

"The role of this new library is less to do with shelving and checking out books — and much more about research and discovery," said Andrew Herkovic, director of communications and development at Stanford Libraries.

Libraries are the very heart of the research university, the center for scholarship. But the accumulation of information online is shifting their sense of identity.

For 40 years, the metal shelves of the modest Physics and Engineering libraries were magnets to thousands of students and faculty, including Nobel Prize winners Douglas Osheroff, Robert Laughlin and Steven Chu, who now directs the U.S. Department of Energy.

On the wall of the Physics Library are 16 original prints by photographer Ansel Adams, dedicated to pioneering physicist Russell Varian. A cardboard cutout of a cheerful Albert Einstein greets visitors. A playful collection of clocks — illustrating the randomness of time — decorate a wall.

The future library — on the second floor of "The Octagon," the centerpiece of the university's new science and engineering quad that opens later this year — will offer a stark contrast.

It is only half the size of the current Engineering Library, but saves its space for people, not things. It features soft seating, "brainstorm islands," a digital bulletin board and group event space. There are few shelves, and it will feature a self-checkout system.

It is developing a completely electronic reference desk, and there will be four Kindle 2 e-readers on site. Its online journal search tool, called xSearch, can scan 28 online databases, a grant directory and more than 12,000 scientific journals.

Several factors are driv-

Most of the libraries on campus are approaching saturation. For every book that comes in, we've got to find another book to send off.

Andrew Herkovic director of communications and development, Stanford Libraries

ing the shift.

Stanford is running out of room, restricted by an agreement with Santa Clara County, Calif., that limits how much it can grow. Increasingly, the university seeks to preserve precious square footage.

Adding to its pressures is the steady flow of books. Stanford buys 100,000 volumes a year — or 273 every day.

"Most of the libraries on campus are approaching saturation," Herkovic said. "For every book that comes in, we've got to find another book to send off."

This fierce competition for space on campus means that many, perhaps most, books will be shipped 38 miles away to a Livermore, Calif., storage facility.

Stanford's plight is not unique. Four miles off its Durham, N.C., campus, Duke University has a high-density storage facility, with shelves 30 feet high, to hold 15 million books. Harvard's repository is 35 miles away in the rural town of Southborough, Mass.

"You just get to the point where you're busting at the seams," said Lori Goetsch, president of the Association of College and Research Libraries and dean of libraries at Kansas State in Manhattan, Kan. — which stores its books more than 80 miles away, in Lawrence.

The sciences are the perfect place to test bookless libraries, librarians say. In math, online books tend to render formulas badly. And those in the humanities, arts and social sciences still embrace the serendipitous discoveries made while browsing. Johanna Drucker, UCLA professor of information studies, asks: "What version of a work should be digitized as representative? Leo Tolstoy's original Russian text? Or the Maude translation? Should we digitize the sanitized version of Mark Twain's classics, or the originals?"

But technical information is readily and conveniently accessed online. "Physics was one of the first disciplines to really develop a strong electronic presence," Goetsch said.

Science and engineering students agree, saying there is little nostalgia for paper. "As far as research articles go, physics publication is already essentially entirely online," said physics graduate student Daniel Weissman. "And old journal editions from before the Internet era have largely been digitized, so you can get those articles online too. So that just leaves reference books — and yeah, you're starting to see more and more of those in online versions, too."

But the transition is tougher for Physics librarian Stella Ota, who is responsible for the fate of thousands of old books as she prepares for the Wednesday closure.

"It is challenging — I'll look at a book and say, 'This is important work, but not currently used,'" she said. So the 1937 edition of Webel's Technical Dictionary, German-English, is moving to Livermore. So is the huge and heavy Carnegie Atlas of Galaxies, with glossy photos.

"Or perhaps it is worn, or damaged, or food was spilled," so it will be given away, she said. That is the fate of the 1970-'79 Bibliography of Astronomy, as well as the decrepit Selected Physical Constants.

A lucky few will be selected for the few shelves at the new library.

"When I look back, then there is a certain sadness for me. Any change is hard. And there are moments of joy, when I see bookplates of former faculty who owned and donated the book, and sometimes made notes on the side," Ota said.

"But looking forward, I see an opportunity to create something new."

Training key to squelching parrot's noise

Q: Be careful what you ask for. After having several other parrot species that were lovely but said little, we wanted a bird that might really talk. No only does our African Grey Parrot repeatedly scream our names (and I mean scream), he also calls our dog, Charlie. He sounds enough like my husband that the dog comes running. This bird also imitates the doorbell (which Charlie barks at), the dishwasher and the microwave timers. With one dog and one parrot, our house is bedlam. Any tips on how to teach a parrot to use an "inside voice"? — G.J., Cyberspace

A: You have the right idea, concerning an "inside voice," says IAABC certified parrot consultant Jamie Whittaker, of Houston, Texas.

The problem is, your African Grey is always being rewarded for his behavior. Some of that you can control. For example, some parrots learn to imitate a microwave timer because after it goes off, the pet gets a treat. The birds think if they make the timer noise, you'll offer a treat. You can cut that association by no longer feeding your bird right after the timer goes off.

When the parrot calls your dog and the dog responds, this is rewarding to your parrot. So, teach your dog to come to you when the bird calls by simply calling him after the bird does.

Whittaker guesses that being human, you sometimes become exasperated, giving your bird attention even if you're angry. But remember, parrots like to scream at one another; it's what they do. When you don't like something your bird does, walking away is a far more effective punishment than losing your cool.

You can also offer your bird more enrichment toys and objects to chew on and generally keep the pet entertained so he doesn't think as much about imitating the doorbell.

Multimedia Bible aims for digital generation

BY JEFF KUNERTH
The Orlando Sentinel (MCT)

ORLANDO, Fla. — For a generation growing up with digital media, the written word of God printed on paper may have little appeal.

It's for them that an Orlando, Fla., company came up with the multimedia digital Glo Bible.

Nelson Saba, founder of Immersion Digital, said, "If you look at Bible literacy among younger generations, it's dismal. This is designed to be a digital alternative to the paper Bible."

A Gallup poll in 2000 found that about a quarter of young people ages 18-29 read the Bible weekly — about half the rate of those 65 or older. Part of that, Saba contends, is the younger generation's aversion to the printed word.

"There is nothing wrong with paper. I have lots of paper Bibles, but it's just not the media they engage," Saba said.

The Glo, released in October, recently won Bible of the Year award from the Evangelical Christian Publishers Association. It's the first digital Bible to receive the distinction in the 32 years of the awards. The company is now working on an application that will allow Glo to go mobile. By the end of the year, Glo software will be available on iPhones and iPads, Nelson said.

"The paper Bible, you have to carry it with you," Saba said. "The biggest advantage of Glo is you can access the Bible through whatever device you have in your hands."

Currently, Glo is available only for personal computers and laptops, but the intent from its inception was that it would be applicable to mobile devices, Saba said. The Glo includes a series of interactive buttons that allow users to explore the Bible through text, a biblical timeline, an atlas and specific topics. Users can select a topic such as "parenting," and the software will produce all Scripture referring to parenting. They can click on the atlas button, see an aerial map of Jerusalem, zoom down to a specific spot, such as the Dome of the Rock, and take a virtual tour inside the shrine.

The Glo contains 7,000 articles, 2,000 high-definition images and more than 500 virtual tours.

TONIQUE TRILOGY SALON

Tonique's Trilogy would like to thank all our clients that have made our salon in the running for Elle Magazine's Top 100 salons in the U.S. 15% off with selected stylists this week only!

Question: My 14 year old daughter wants a pink streak in her hair. We bought some pink dye at the beauty supply store, and it did nothing to her brown hair. What can we do?

Answer: Because crazy colors are pure pigment with no activator, they need to be placed on pre lightened hair or blonde hair in order to show up. They also fade fast and need to be refreshed more often. The good news is that if she decides to not have a pink streak, it is easily removed. I believe that the only way to insure you get the results you want is to come to a professional salon. One pink streak will not be all the costly, and the results will be better.

Eat safe at your picnic

THE UNOFFICIAL START to summer began with the Memorial Day weekend. Picnics and cookouts are a big part of summer for many people. I know I look forward to them.

To keep picnics and cookouts safe and enjoyable for everyone, there are a few safety tips we need to keep in mind when it comes to the food. Bacteria can grow in all stages of picnic food preparations. It's important to keep safety in mind when handling and preparing food and also with the equipment used to store the food.

Before handling food, we need to make sure our hands, utensils, work surfaces and containers are all clean. Foods that are cooked in advance should be cooled thoroughly and quickly to prevent bacteria from growing. Mayonnaise-based foods need to be kept cold. When they become warm, that's when bacteria can grow. Fruit should be washed before being cut. Salmonella and Shigella, two common causes of foodborne illnesses, can be present on the rind and get onto the fruit if not properly washed. Cool the fruit after it's cut. This will reduce the chance for bacteria to grow.

Food safety doesn't stop at the preparation. When transporting food, use a sturdy insulated cooler and plenty of ice or ice packs. Cold foods should be kept at 40 degrees. When possible place the cooler in the passenger area of the car because the temperature in the trunk can reach 150 degrees. Hot foods need kept at 140 degrees or hotter to prevent bacteria growth. When transporting hot foods, immediately after cooking, wrap the food in a towel and then newspapers and place in a heavy bag or box to help hold in the heat.

Plenty of utensils and plates are a must for picnics. Foods that have touched raw meat should not be used on the food once it has been cooked, unless they've been washed. Disposable plates are a great idea for picnics. When cooking at the picnic, cook all the food at one time. It's unsafe to partially cook food and then let it sit to finish cooking later. Doing so would give bacteria a chance to grow and possibly form toxins. Meat should be cooked thoroughly to ensure it's safe to eat. Meat is safe when the juices run clear, or when there is no pink meat near the bone or center of the meat.

Now that the food has been safely handled and prepared, it's time to enjoy it. Food, hot or cold, shouldn't be kept out for more than an hour. If there are leftovers place them back in the cooler after they are served. Ice has a better chance of keeping the food safe for you. If the ice has melted, throw out the leftovers. Water won't keep the foods at a safe temperature.

These safety tips will help keep your picnics safe and enjoyable for everyone.

What's fair when clergy asked to officiate funerals

Q: I work for a non-sectarian cemetery and we have families requesting clergy to preside over funeral services all the time. As a courtesy, we used to keep a directory of clergy on hand for out-of-town families to call. The roster covered multiple faiths and denominations.

Some time ago, we had to stop recommending clergy due to a clergy scandal. When families called asking for a minister or priest, we began recommending that they call a local church. Then we found out the churches didn't appreciate this and turned families away, saying, "We don't do that," or "Tell the cemetery to stop recommending this church."

If a Catholic priest's vocation is to serve the community and attend to the sick and dying, why aren't they obligated to attend to the already deceased? Shouldn't they be willing to bless the grave and give a proper send off to their Catholic

RABBI

brethren? Does it have to do with a person's final resting place (a Catholic or non-sectarian cemetery)? If so, in my opinion, that's very un-Christian. — Anonymous

A: Your painful question raises two important but related issues.

The first issue involves what a clergy person owes to the general community. Issue No. 2, often overlooked by readers but not by clergy, involves what people owe to the local clergy.

Let's begin with the obligations of Catholic priests. A priest is obligated by sacred vows to serve the Catholic families in his parish. A parish is a geographically defined area, and the families in the parish are those who register with the parish church (although even those who don't register are technical members of the parish).

If a Catholic family from outside the parish wants a priest to officiate at a funeral, most priests will try to help if they can. However, they're not obligated to do so, and what often happens is that priests whose parishes are close to large Catholic cemeteries are called upon quite often to minister to the needs of out-of-town families. This is an unfair but unavoidable burden for them. With the severe shortage of Catholic priests, it's completely understandable that sometimes there's simply no priest available for this above-and-beyond-the-call-of-duty service. Your anger toward them because of this is, in my view, inappropriate and misplaced.

As far as ministers and rabbis are concerned, the parish system does not apply. These are congregationalist houses of worship, and their clergy are responsible only for the families who choose to affiliate with the particular church or synagogue. However, even there, most clergy will try to help out if they have time. A fee is generally charged for such officiating.

Sometimes a helpful sharing of religious responsibilities occurs when a funeral service is conducted out of town and a local clergy person is asked to officiate only during the burial service at the cemetery.

The second issue is one that's important to clergy and ought to be important to all religious people: The shocking arrogance of people who do nothing to support their local houses of worship, yet expect the clergy to be available to them for rites of passage like funerals whenever needed.

There's no shame in not supporting your local church or synagogue if you're not religious and don't plan to ever avail yourself of its services, comfort and prayers. However, if you do expect to need such services in the future, the time to extend your support is now. I don't like houses of worship being thought of as fee-for-service institutions.

However, churches do need to pay their bills, and for people to be "free riders" is morally indefensible and spiritually limited.

We are all trying to create communities of the faithful, not supermarkets for the occasionally needy. There's an enormous difference between having a priest, minister or rabbi who knew your deceased relative sit with you and help you and your family heal your broken hearts vs. having some "pick up" clergy person on hand who never met the deceased try to figure out what to say and what to do at the funeral.

The many clergy I know and admire of every faith do so much for people who often do so little for them and for their religious institutions. They should be praised for their compassion, not derided for their inability to be everywhere at every time for people they will never see again.

Johnson scores another win 'Around the World'

Submitted to The Dominion Post

It's another record-breaking year for the "Around the World in 60 Days" competition which recently wrapped up at Lakeside Physical Therapy and Life Enhancement Center. Jim Johnson of Morgantown, despite the unusually snowy winter, broke his own record by exercising his way around the world in just 17 days. Johnson won the competition last year by completing the trek in 19 days.

Johnson is part of Lakeside Physical Therapy's fourth annual "Around the World in 60 Days" competition, a motivational competition where fitness club members exercise their way around the world in a 60-day race, without ever leaving Morgantown.

Each competitor earns miles for working on the treadmill, elliptical machine, as well as for time spent in yoga and Pilates classes and resistance training. Their progress is charted on a world map on the gym wall, moving each competitor's little flag along a 35,100 mile course.

It's all part of the I Lost it at Lakeside! program, an eight-week motivational weight loss program designed to help new members achieve success in their individual fitness programs and to kick-start the renewed exercise programs of existing members. Measurements for beginning weight, body fat percentage and flexibility were recorded for each competitor at the beginning and end of the program.

Jim Johnson of Morgantown broke his own record in the "Around the World in 60 Days" competition at Lakeside Physical Therapy. With his course plotted on a world map, Johnson exercised his way around the world in just 17 days.

Johnson said many days at the beginning of the competition he didn't want to brave the snowy and icy roads, but the competition gave him extra incentive to get in his work out. "The lack of daylight in the winter can make you lazy, but coming here to work out makes you feel much better; it clears your mind if you had a bad day at work."

"Around the World" organizer and exercise physiologist Doug Wilson said the competition and watching the progress of your flag moving on the map were both great motivators.

"Our clients got to see it's possible to achieve your goals in a short period of time and that exercise can be fun, it doesn't have to be like a job," he said.

"It was a winning situation for everyone in the race," explained Jane Nicoli, fitness director and owner of Lakeside Physical Therapy. "It was an opportunity to get more fit and to break out of the same old work out routine, while having a little fun," she added.

Prizes were given to the competitor who finished first, logged the most miles, lost the most weight and body fat, gained the most flexibility, and to every member who completed the world-wide trek.

It's no surprise that many people suffer foot pain

Q: I have terrible pain in the bottom of my foot. It is a stabbing pain every morning when I get out of bed and has lasted for 6 weeks now. Could it be a heel spur? What is that? Why does it happen? Can a chiropractor help?

A: Most people take about 9,000 steps per day. Running and other aerobic exercises also put pressure on the feet. No wonder aches and pains in this part of the body are common. Factors such as flat or over-pronated feet and the wrong type of shoe can increase irritation. These factors can also affect the health of the back, knees and legs.

Heel pain is one of the most common foot ailments. The cause is usually inflammation of the plantar fascia, a band of connective tissue that surrounds the muscles on the bottom of the foot. It connects the heel bone to the ball of the foot, supporting the arch, protecting the foot and absorbing shock. It is a terrifically tough tissue. When gravity begins to win the battle of the arch and it starts to collapse, the plantar fascia will begin a long process of stretching and tearing. This may last for years because this tissue is so strong. It is comparable to bending thick plastic.

Patients with plantar fasciitis often have pain when getting up out of bed and standing up after they have been sitting for a while. The pain originates in front of the heel bone, but can spread over the entire bottom of the foot. In time, inflammation associated with the condition can lead to scar tissue, calcium deposits and heel spurs. These spurs, which are a bony growth on the front part of the heel bone, can cause sharp stabbing pain when walking. Most chiropractors will be able to determine the origin of the problem and the best treatments. These might include ultrasound, joint manipulation, muscle stretching and strengthening exercises and orthotics to name a few.

Not all chiropractors look for this type of problem and should tell you if they are unfamiliar with treating the condition. But if you can find the right one, they will offer some of the best recommendations to manage the pain and correct the problem as much as possible.

DAR honors MIA-POWs

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Some members of the Elizabeth Ludington Hagans-Colonel John Evans Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution and their husbands attended a memorial service with full military rites for Second Lieutenant Jack S. Arnett, Army Air Corps, on May 15.

Lt. Arnett was a WWII pilot who was missing in action for 65 years after his airplane was shot down. The airplane was under about 70 feet of water off the Palau Island Coast, where many United States aircraft were shot down during the war. His remains were found in the airplane as well as the other soldiers with him.

The service started at the Myers Funeral Home in Sistersville, and a motorcade then proceeded to the Friendly Cemetery at Friendly. An antique 1951 ambulance transported the remains to the cemetery.

The procession to the cemetery was led by the Patriot Guard Riders and the Legion Guard Riders. A tribute in flight was done by the West Virginia Air National Guard. Several patriot groups in addition to DAR chapters from throughout the state were in attendance and took part in the tribute to Lt. Arnett as he was placed in his final resting place beside his parents.

A POW-MIA Ceremony was held at the Friendly Community Building immediately following the graveside memorial service. The Ohio Valley Chapter of the DAR were the organizers of the service.

Four of the Hagans-Evans Chapter members attended state conference for the WVSDAR at Ogleby Park in Wheeling. The National President General, Linda Gist Calvin, from Washington, D.C., addressed those in attendance and thanked the chapters for their work in supporting the organizations goals and also passed out awards to the individual chapters.

A gold medal and certificate was given to an outstanding airman in the ROTC Air Force program at WVU, as well as a gold medal and certificate to the most deserving ROTC Army cadet by the Hagans-Evans Chapter.

On May 14 in Clarksburg, 24 people were naturalized at the federal building, and members presented each of them with a bag containing many patriotic items as well as the United States flag. A reception was held immediately following the ceremony where the DAR members had the opportunity to talk with the new citizens and congratulate them.

If anyone has questions about the DAR activities and wants more information, they can call the regent, Jean Wilburn, at 304-291-0549.

Weight-loss challenge begins Tuesday

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Two weight-loss challenge workshops will be offered beginning in June. The first will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday at BOPARC Senior Center on Eureka Drive. The second will be at 6 p.m. Tuesday at 9 Pine Brook Lane off Brookhaven Road.

There is a $29 entrance fee to join the challenge. Of that, $4 will be used to cover expenses and supplies for the workshops. The remaining $25 will be paid out in cash and prizes to the top three "biggest losers" who lose the largest percentage of their weight. It is based on percentages, which makes it equal competition for men and women.

There will be weekly hand-out sheets, weigh-ins and short discussions. The challenge gives participants a chance to fight obesity through education and a better lifestyle. The goal is for people to feel good, look great and maintain a healthy lifestyle. Specific rules are in place to keep everyone consistent. Fail to weigh in? Pay a $2 fee, as well as a $1 fee per pound gained. These fees will be added to the cash payout and awarded to the person who has lost the most overall inches. There is no specific weight-loss program required to join the challenge.

Participants may use any weight-loss program they like, be it Jenny Craig, Weight Watchers, Herbalife or customized programs of their own. Weight-loss coaches will work with each person.

The first weight loss challenge was a success with five participants losing a total of 99 1/2 pounds in a 12-week period.

Seating is limited. Info or to preregister: Mary Belle Rowe, at 304-291-2012 or BOPARC Senior Center, at 304-296-7002.

World Cup Fires Up Fans

The 2010 World Cup will be the first time this event has been held on the continent of Africa.

This month, one of the biggest and most popular sporting events in the world begins in South Africa. The FIFA World Cup™ is an international soccer tournament that is held every four years. It lasts for an entire month. In this issue, The Mini Page will look at this unique competition, which takes place in 2010 from June 11 to July 11.

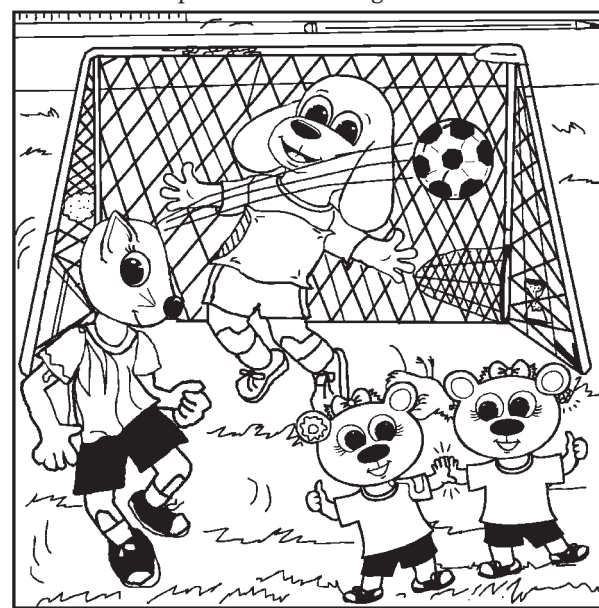

Millions of people will watch the FIFA World Cup on television or in person. More than 700 million TV viewers tuned in to the final game of the 2006 World Cup. What Americans call "soccer" is called "football" in other parts of the world. American football is a much different sport. How many differences can you think of?

A long journey to South Africa

Just making it to the World Cup is a big deal. More than 200 nations tried to qualify to be included in this event. Qualifying games started in 2007, when teams began play in their regional confederation (kon-FEH-der-AY-shun). A confederation is a group of nations located in the same part of the world. There are six confederations that make up FIFA, or the International Federation of Association Football, which is in charge of the World Cup.

There are 208 member nations in FIFA — more than belong to the United Nations. Each confederation gets a certain number of teams that qualify for the World Cup. For example, South America will send five teams, while Central America and North America combined will send three. The South African national team is the only team to automatically qualify, since it is hosting the tournament.

Meet Our Oceans

The oceans are the stars of the DisneyNature documentary movie "Oceans." Even though they cover about three-fourths of our world, the oceans are still a mystery. We have explored so little of them that visiting their depths is almost like exploring outer space. Photographers traveled to all five oceans in the world, the Pacific, Atlantic, Indian, Arctic and Antarctic. The life-forms in these mysterious places range from the biggest animal ever to live on this planet, the blue whale, to the very small creatures it eats, the krill. About 80 different species, or kinds, of creatures appear in the film. One of the scariest parts of the movie is how much damage people have done to the oceans. But the movie also shows how people are helping our oceans recover.

Thirty-two nations have qualified for the 2010 FIFA World Cup, and several hundred of the world's best soccer players will participate. A total of 63 matches will be played to determine the champion. The first part, or stage, of the tournament is made up of group matches. The 32 teams are divided into eight groups of four teams. From June 11 to June 25, each team will play only the other members of its group. In the group stage, a team is awarded three points for a win and one point for a draw, or tie. The top two teams in each group advance to the second part, known as the "knockout stage." A team that wins in this stage advances to play again, while the losing team is eliminated, or knocked out, from the tournament.

The 69,000-seat Cape Town Stadium is an example of South Africa's love of soccer and its ability to host this global sporting event.

Gus Goodsport's Report

Supersport: Kasey Keller

Height: 6-2 Birthdate: 11-29-69 Hometown: Olympia, Wash. A multitude of 40-year-old guys will be among the millions watching the World Cup in South Africa this month. But not Kasey Keller. He will be on the field as a U.S. goalkeeper — again. It will be the "Oldie" goalie's fifth trip to appear on soccer's biggest stage. Keller was the U.S. Player of the Year in 1997, 1999 and 2005. The former Portland University All-American can still stop shots from point-blank range. Playing professionally in America, England, Spain and Germany, the talented veteran has amassed more victories than any other U.S. keeper. During his travels abroad, Keller broadened his perspective. He learned foreign languages, and, along with his wife and two daughters, he once lived in a 1,000-year-old castle in Germany. Refusing to slow down, Keller settled in Seattle and played for the Sounders of the MLS, or Major League Soccer, this year. But this month, he wants to help the U.S. team create a stir in the World Cup.

Welcome to South Africa

A troubled past

For centuries, tribes of Africans lived in what would later become the nation of South Africa. But in the 1700s and 1800s, many Europeans settled there. They were attracted by the fertile soil for farming and natural resources, such as gold and diamonds. The black Africans and white settlers often fought each other over territory and rights. South Africa later became a colony of Great Britain. It fought with the Allies in World War I and World War II. South Africa became independent from Britain in 1961, but the white minority wanted to stay separate from the much larger black population. This forced separation and discrimination became known as apartheid (uh-PAR-tight). Under apartheid, blacks were not citizens and could not vote. Black children went to separate schools that weren't as good as white schools. Many blacks were also forced to live in poor areas called "townships."

Host cities for the soccer matches of the FIFA World Cup are:

- Cape Town
- Durban
- Johannesburg
- Manguang/Bloemfontein
- Nelson Mandela Bay/Port Elizabeth
- Nelspruit
- Polokwane
- Rustenburg
- Tshwane/Pretoria

The end of apartheid

People throughout the world hated apartheid. The white South African government was isolated, or cut off, from much of the world. Travel and trade with South Africa were limited. South Africa was even banned from playing international soccer by FIFA. In the early 1990s, however, the white minority government began working to end apartheid. In 1994, South Africa held its first nationwide elections. Nelson Mandela, who had spent 27 years in jail for opposing apartheid, became president. He served until 1999. He has received many honors for his work for peace.

Nelson Mandela 1918-

A brighter future

South Africa has struggled with other issues since the end of apartheid. Unemployment, crime and AIDS are still difficult problems for the nation. But the people of South Africa — black and white — now work together to solve these problems. The 2010 World Cup is an opportunity for all South Africans to show off their national spirit to the rest of the world.

Selling the Daddy track

Dear Mr. Dad: I'm an expectant father, and I want to take some time off after our baby is born. But even though my company offers some family-friendly benefits, my boss isn't very happy about the idea. At all. I know I have legal rights under the Family Leave Act, but I don't want things to get hostile. Do you have any suggestions for how I might be able to convince my employer?

A: In the past decade or so, more and more companies are offering family-friendly benefits. But when it comes to male employees, the messages about whether it's okay to actually use those benefits are, as you've discovered, mixed at best. For example, about 13 percent of U.S. employers offer paid paternity leave. But even at those companies, only about half of eligible men take it. The rest don't, largely out of fear that they'd be committing career suicide. Overall, compared to mothers, fathers are only one-tenth as likely to have ever used parenting leave and one-sixth as likely to have ever worked part time.

What it comes down to is what attorney Kari Palazzari calls the "daddy double-bind."

Men are still expected to be the primary breadwinner, so "success" at work means spending less time at home. But today's dads are now expected to be actively involved in every part of their family life, and "success" at home requires spending less time at work. It's nearly impossible to reconcile the two.

But dads — like you — are certainly not giving up. Even those who don't take paternity or family leave manage to carve out some time to be with their newborns by cobbling together sick days, comp time, vacation days, and so on. On average, that adds up to a little over a week.

The good news is that it looks as though some cracks are developing in what I like to call "the other glass ceiling" — the obstacles that make it hard for men to be with their children as much as they'd like.

ASK MR. DAD

A growing number of companies are discovering that not having father-friendly policies can be incredibly expensive, and that having them is just plain good for business. Let me give you a few examples, some of which were drawn from a wonderful report, "Defining Paternity Leave: Shifting Roles, New Responsibilities in the Family and the Workplace," produced by The Boston College Center for Work & Family. You may want to print out this column and give it to your boss.

■ Businesses lose more than $150 billion a year due to absenteeism, employee turnover, health care and workers' compensation benefits directly resulting from overworked, overstressed dads.

■ Inability to balance work, family and community is linked to reduced work performance, higher employee turnover, poor morale and increased work conflict.

■ Absenteeism alone costs an average of nearly $800 per employee every year — $80,000 per year for a company with 100 employees.

■ Employees who felt that their supervisors supported their personal and family needs were three and a half times more likely to report high levels of job satisfaction (70 percent vs. 19 percent).

■ Companies that offer paid parental leave say that those policies "have strengthened their recruiting and retention initiatives."

■ Employers with fair leave policies believe that these policies "have been key components to increasing company loyalty and employee good will."

■ A number of companies, including the Marriott hotel chain, estimate that for every dollar it spends helping employees with work/life issues such as fatherhood, the company saves four dollars due to lower turnover and absenteeism.

Yanni-Rice

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Yanni of Morgantown are pleased to announce the engagement of their daughter, Anne Elizabeth, to Rodney Lee Rice II, son of Mr. Rodney Rice and Ms. Lori Gorda Rice of Morgantown. Rodney's grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. John Rice, Mr. Rudy Gorda and the late Mrs. Mary Kensick Gorda of Morgantown. The wedding is July 3.

Wolfe-Carr

The marriage of Stachia N. Wolfe, daughter of Veronica Ball of Thornton and Karl Ball of Fairmont, and Michael A. Carr, son of Patsey Carr and the late Steve Carr of Grafton, will be at 3 p.m. June 26, 2010, at the Mother's Day Shrine. The Rev. Edwards will officiate.

The granddaughter of Meda Trimble of Grafton and the late Oscar Trimble and special Papap Butch Knotts of Grafton, Stachia graduated from Grafton High School and West Virginia Junior College with a degree in business management. She works at Longview Power Plant.

The grandson of Dema Carr of Philippi, Michael graduated from Grafton High School and works for Consol Energy Mines.

Q: I'm extremely concerned and hurt that my son never wants to talk to me when he is at his mother's house. When the kids are at my house, which is 50 percent, I encourage them to call their mother if they want and call her back if she calls. My son seems happy at my house and likes to talk to his mom when she calls, but is distant and withdrawn from me when he's with her. I've brought this up to his mother, but since it's not happening to her, she really doesn't care. What should I do?

A: It sounds like your son is facing what we call "Allegiance and Betrayal issues." Very common when kids go back and forth between their divorced parents. If he's with mom and enjoys it, he's betraying Dad. If he's with Dad and enjoys it, he's betraying Mom. Are you or his mother possibly falling into the following traps?

■ When your son is at the other parent's home you call just to tell him how much you miss him — right before bed so he can fall asleep knowing you love him.

■ Just before he leaves to go to the other parent's home you get a touch of sentimentality and wave goodbye with tears welling in your eyes.

EX-ETIQUETTE

■ You buy him a puppy, kitty, new video game, etc. and call him at the other parent's house just to let him know it's waiting for him when he gets home.

■ You put down the other parent.

Parents who do any of these things are putting a child right in the middle. When you sadly call him right before he goes to bed, the last thing he hears is your anxious voice telling him how life just isn't the same when he's not around, and so he feels guilty for being there when it makes you so unhappy — even if he loves being there. Even complaining about something like the other parent's lateness in front of the child can make them start to weigh their allegiance. Check yourselves!

It will help if you and Mom understand that his spending time with the other parent is normal behavior when parents share custody after a breakup. Act like it! It's in your child's best interest if he feels comfortable in both of his parents' homes.

EX-ETIQUETTE is written by Jann Blackstone-Ford, M.A., and her husband's ex-wife, Sharyl Jupe. They co-founded bonusfamilies.com and have authored "Ex-Etiquette for Parents" and "Ex-Etiquette for Holidays and Other Family Celebrations." Reach them at ee@bonusfamilies.com.

World Cup franchise keeps getting better

"2010 FIFA WORLD CUP: SOUTH AFRICA" by EA Sports for Xbox 360. Rated E for everyone.

Donovan or Cristiano Ronaldo."

To add to World Cup realism, when you reach the finals there is confetti on the field, and the fans cheer at an appropriate decibel level depending on the action. A lull means the crowd has a dull roar; a shot of the post get's the speakers shaking, and I don't want to say what happens if you score.

The graphics remain impressive, as there are shadows on the field depending on the time of day and the stadium. The players move fluidly and don't feel like they can only run on the X or Y axes. The pageantry of the World Cup is present throughout the game, and the gamer can easily get sucked in becoming way too concerned about the outcome of the match.

Audio commentary is great before or after a match, as the team's national anthem plays in the background. The commentators talk about a player or a team's strength or about a squad's history in the World Cup.

But, during the game the commentary remains an issue, as all that is said is the player's name. If you watch a soccer match, you know the announcer doesn't just sit there and say the player's name. It would be nice to have some more discussion between the announcers during the actual match. That is one of a few minor problems with the game.

A couple other gripes I have: In the Captain Your Country Mode, the camera angle isn't the same as the Be a Pro Mode in "FIFA 10." In "FIFA 10," the camera was locked in on the created player, and in World Cup, no matter which camera you select it's still farther away. It makes it difficult to set up the action so your player becomes the scoring (or whatever position you're playing) champion.

I also don't like how you can't change the stadium in qualifying. The U.S. doesn't play every qualifying game in the same stadium or city. It would have been nice to be able to change, just to add some variety to the long qualifying process.

FIFA World Cup only has a few problems and none are related to actual gameplay. In summation, the game provides an actual representation of the World Cup experience, enough to tide us over until the real thing kicks off this week. The only downside is that, like the real World Cup, we have to wait another four years until the World Cup gaming returns to the various consoles.

ALEX LANG is a reporter for The Dominion Post. E-mail: lifestyles@dominionpost.com.

It's JUNE, and normally that means warmer weather and no school. But, every four years it has a different meaning — World Cup.

The world-premier soccer (football) championship reaches its final stages. And for gamers, we get an additional soccer game. In April, Electronic Arts released "2010 FIFA World Cup: South Africa."

I figured it would be a decent game, because the developers had the near-perfect "FIFA 10" to build off of, but it's as if they took the "FIFA 10" and made it better.

The best addition is the new cut scenes after any stoppage. The scenes of my manager telling the players what to do or players trying to get position before the free kick are a welcome addition. Once you get your World Cup final, there are shots of face-painted fans added the cut scenes as well.

The cut scenes also add a bit of realism and connection to the players that was lacking in "FIFA 10." You can get a close-up of your players and manager instead of only having the bird's eye view for the game. And you can say, "Hey, that's Landon

HOME and Real Estate

 ABEREGG

Sorting out ownership

Q: Can you help me with defining the types of ownership one can have in real estate?

A: Excellent question! Estates may be held in several ways, including severalty, co-ownership and joint tenancy.

Severalty

To own real estate as one individual, that individual is said to own the property in severalty. This means that the property owner has sole rights to the property and sole discretion over the transfer of ownership. When a spouse owns property in severalty, state law affects how the ownership is held.

Co-ownership

When two or more individuals hold title to one parcel of real estate they are considered co-owners. The individuals may co-own real estate as tenants in common, joint tenants or tenants by the entirety. During the period of co-ownership, there is no apparent difference among the various types of ownership except for when the property is conveyed or one of the owners dies. Tenancy in common is when two or more people own a parcel of real estate. Each tenant holds an undivided fractional interest in the property.

For example, a tenant in common may hold one-half or even one-third interest in the property. The property is not divided into specific halves or thirds, just the ownership. The deed will state how the interest is held by each co-owner. The co-owners can sell, convey, mortgage or transfer their interest without the consent of the other, but just their portion.

Joint tenancy

Joint tenancy happens when two or more parties own property with the rights of survivorship. That means upon death of a joint tenant, his or her interest does not pass to heirs or according to will. Rather, the entire ownership remains to the surviving joint tenant. If there are more than two tenants, each successive joint tenant acquires the deceased tenant's interest until the last survivor takes title in severalty (sole ownership). In trusts, one person transfers ownership of property to another person to hold or manage for the benefit of a third party.

For example, a grandparent may want to ensure that their grandchild receives a college education, so he transfers his oil field to the grandchild's mother. She is then instructed that the income must be used to pay for the child's education. This forms a trust — the grandfather is the trustor (the person who created the trust), the grandchild is the beneficiary (the person receiving benefits of the trust), and the mother is the trustee (the party who is entrusted to carry out the trustor's wishes).

I hope this helps you understand some of the different types of ownership one can have in property.

Turn old junk into garden treasures

BY KAREN DEER

St. Louis Post-Dispatch (MCT)

Are you a scavenger? If you are, maybe you'll be lucky enough to find a Radio Flyer stuffed into a city trash bin, as we did. It was old, rusty and could barely move.

We grabbed it. If not, you may want to hold on to some of your junk for your garden paths, patios and porches.

With the help of a garden center, the red wagon was transformed into a lavish garden centerpiece, filled with annuals, perennials and herbs.

You can personalize your garden with old, junky items scavenged from basements, garage sales and flea markets. See what a little fresh paint, new blooms and even strawberries did to these old items.

Old wooden chair

DESIGNER/GARDEN CENTER: Wendy Doan, garden stylist at For The Garden, St. Louis.

1. Cut center out of chair seat so pot can rest on the frame.
2. Spray paint chair and pot.
3. Plant large pot (we used a 12-inch clay pot plus smaller potted plants for the ladder part of the chair) filled with yellow sweet potato vine, red verbena, "Tango Neon" purple geranium, Calibrachoa "Dreamsickle," Supertunia "Royal Velvet" and premium potting soil

PRICE: $55 for soil, flowers and spray paint

Old metal strainers

DESIGNER/GARDEN CENTER: Pam Naugle, assistant general manager at Hartke Nursery, 1030 North Warson Road, Olivette, Mo.

1. Line both large and small strainers with plastic grocery bags so that the soil doesn't wash out of the holes.
2. Fill both strainers with soil.
3. Place an upside-down 5-inch clay pot into the back of the large container. Push it down until it is level with the rim of the strainer.
4. Place the small strainer on the upside-down pot and the back rim of the large strainer. (Naugle used a dragonfly pole pushed through the strainer, through the pot and into the soil below to stabilize the top strainer.)
5. Plant the smaller strainer with Dianthus "Strawberry Parfait" and Allysum "Snow Crystals."
6. Plant the larger strainer with strawberry plants. (Naugle used the everbearing variety.)

PRICE: About $25 for flowers, strawberries, soil and dragonfly

Old metal watering can

DESIGNER/GARDEN CENTER: Diane White, owner of White's Greenhouses, Godfrey, Mo.

1. Fill the bottom one-third of the can with plastic crumpled containers to improve drainage.
2. Fill the rest of the can with potting soil.

3. For height, plant a white caladium. For fullness, plant a dragon wing begonia and Torenia "Blue Wave."
4. To soften the look, plant asparagus fern to drape over the edge.
5. After planting, spread a slow-release fertilizer and then cover the soil with sphagnum moss for a finished look.

PRICE: $25 for soil, flowers, plants and fertilizer

Old man's boot

DESIGNER/GARDEN CENTER: Leslie Sortino, sales associate at Bowood Farms, St. Louis

1. Remove the steel toe and shoe tongue.
  2. Drill holes through the sole near the ball of the foot and drill one hole in the inside arch through the leather.
  3. Plant the small toe hole with spicy mix micro-greens such as cabbage "Red Ace," mustard "Sawtooth" and radish "China Rose." Wrap the green tops in a rolled newspaper to prevent them from becoming damaged in the process of threading them through the boot and then into the small hole.
  4. Line the back of the shoe and the tongue area with a scrap of coir liner. This liner is typical in hanging baskets. Add potting mix and time-release fertilizer.
  5. Plant the boot with Lavandula stoechas "Blueberry Ruffles," pansy "Fizzy Lemonberry" and Nemesia "Violet Ice."
  6. Arrange the shoe strings and water thoroughly.
- PRICE: $10 to $15 for flowers, fertilizer, potting mix and coir liner

Red Radio Flyer wagon

DESIGNER/GARDEN CENTER: Maria Mitchell, sales associate at Sugar Creek Gardens, St. Louis, created a fairy woodland garden

1. Drill holes in the wagon for drainage. Line with pebbles for additional drainage.
  2. Fill wagon half full to full with Miracle Gro potting mix containing Osmocote.
  3. Select miniature plants such as miniature conifers, pathway plants, herbs and small flowering perennials and annuals. Add fragrant flowers for bees and butterflies. Plants used: Dwarf Alberta spruce, common juniper, Paul's dwarf mugho pine, Digitalis "goldcrest," English daisy, sedum yunnanense, sweet alyssum, Scotch moss, Ajuga "chocolate chip" and Heriaria "sea foam."
  4. Add accessories, including a miniature cottage with a fence and gate, stones to terrace and create paths and colored glass to create a stream. Other items used: A miniature garden bench, chair, wheelbarrow, flower pot, beehive, birdhouse, birdbath, miniature bees, butterflies, ladybugs, birds, raccoon, a cat, a toad with a toadstool and, of course, fairies.
- PRICE: $75 to $100 includes soil, flowers and accessories

Give hard-working ductwork some extra support

DUCTWORK that is flexible is great for seamlessly snaking around in attics and crawl spaces. Home-owners love it just as much as installers. But if it sags or gets crimped, then it's not working as well as it should, and it even can cause serious problems. Add extra support to sagging areas by creating a splint or sling from wood or cardboard and extra pipe strapping. Just slip the support under the duct to remove sags and crimps. It's easy to do and can make a huge difference.

DEAR CARRELLS: My toilet tank leaks around the flapper. I clean it often, but something in our water just seems to collect around it and cause problems all the time. The last time I cleaned it, I sprayed it with a coating of Armor All Silicone spray. I thought it might help protect it from deteriorating. I'm not sure they would recommend doing this, since it's under water all the time. But it does seem to have slowed down the constant leaking. Maybe it just seals better. All I know is that it works. — D.R.

DEAR AL: I wanted our new fence to last longer, but my wife wanted cedar to match the rest of the neighbors. I treated the wood before putting it up by soaking it in a wood preservative. I made a trough for it from a section of large guttering with end caps. The trough held the preservative and several fence boards at once. It didn't take very long to do, and I know the fence will last much longer. It looks great, too. — J.T.

Q: I put up the guttering on our house all by myself. It wasn't very hard to do, and I know it's going to improve the value of our home. I can't get the end pieces to stay on, though. There are several that fall off during heavy rains. How can I hold them in place better? — K.J.

A: Use sheet-metal screws on metal guttering. Caulk also can be used or, to be safe, use both. Good job!

DEAR KELLY: I don't sew much, but after pricing cushions for our new deck furniture, I decided to try making my own. This turned out to be a great idea! I saved hundreds of dollars by buying some outdoor fabric at the fabric store and doing it myself. I used coordinating fabrics on all of the different pieces and got a unique look. I even made some place mats to go with the cushions. They should last a long time, and I'm very proud of my handiwork. — N.B.

Majolicas move in, out of fashion, but antique appeal grows steadily

TERRY KOVEL

THE 1851 CRYSTAL PALACE Exhibition in London included the introduction of many amazing new products, one of them the revival of majolica. In the 19th century, Italian pottery of the Renaissance era was being studied and collected by English museums. England's Minton factory made a copy of the old designs and glazed them in a similar way. The clay was covered with an opaque white glaze, then painted freehand with bright colors. Minton's majolica was displayed at the 1851 exhibition, and by the 1870s the company was making original designs inspired by Italian majolica. Its work was copied by many English, European and American makers. Later, Minton made majolica using colored glazes painted directly on the clay body. Designers made fanciful pieces like teapots with monkey handles; pitchers featuring birds, fish, shells and flowers; urns held by swans; tables held by monkeys; and jardinières decorated with all types of flowers, birds and trees. Majolica went out of fashion in the 1940s, when the beige, uncluttered look was "in." The colorful look did not come back until the 1990s. Today, majolica made by any manufacturer is popular with collectors. Prices continue to rise. The colors and shapes seem to fit into today's styles.

Q: I have had a wooden table for more than 30 years and was about to give it to my daughter when she turned it over and found a mark. The marks says, "Sept. 29, 1896, 568397, Conrey-Birely Table Co." Is my table older than I thought?

A: Your table is more than 100 years old. The patent was granted to Charles Birely for a method of attaching legs to furniture. Birely lived in Shelbyville, Ind., at the time he applied for the patent and had already been in the furniture business with Jacob A. Conrey for 10 years. The Conrey-Birely Table Co. had manufacturing facilities in Shelbyville and in Grand Rapids, Mich., until about 1909.

Q: I inherited a "gingerbread" clock from my grandmother, who must have bought it sometime between 1870 and 1930. The case looks like walnut, and the glass covering on the front has an etched design. The only identification on it is a partial paper label on the back that says, "Emil Beyer, Watchmaker and Jeweler, Corner 16th and Peach streets, Erie, Pa." The year 1914 is penciled on the back. Can you help me estimate age and value?

A: Gingerbread clocks, also called "kitchen clocks," were introduced after the Civil War and remained popular until World War I. The clocks' cases are pressed, not solid, wood and their designs were pressed into heat-bonded wood veneers or fibers. Emil Beyer, who immigrated to the United States from Germany in about 1880, was the sole proprietor of his family's jewelry shop in Erie from 1900 until his death in 1919. It's very likely that your clock dates from 1914, the year that's penciled on the back. Beyer did not manufacture your clock. The label shows only that his shop sold it. The clock was probably made by one of the U.S. companies that produced countless gingerbread clocks: Ansonia, Gilbert, Ingraham, Seth Thomas or Waterbury. Gingerbread clocks in good condition sell for about $150 to $200.

Celebrity is an excellent disease-resistant slicing tomato.

Tips for later tomatoes

BY KATHY VAN MULLEKOM Daily Press (Newport News, Va.) (MCT)

Between now and July 1, you can put in a succession of tomato plants for late summer and fall harvests. Green tomatoes can be picked and each wrapped in newspaper for ripening for later use.

Here are some tips from Bonnie Plants on how to plant tomatoes. Bonnie Plants, packaged in biodegradable pots, are sold nationwide at independent garden centers and big-box stores like Lowe's, Home Depot and Kmart.

Prep the ground. Loosen the ground and add aged organic compost, working it thoroughly into the soil. Dig a hole as deep as the plant is tall.

Slip plant from pot, if in plastic. Carefully remove the plant. Don't tug on the plant stem or you can sever it from the roots. If roots grow out of the bottom of the pot, tear or cut them away and squeeze and twist the pot to work it from the roots. If your plant grows in a biodegradable pot, tear off the bottom half of the pot to make sure roots are in constant contact with the soil. Crumble the pot pieces into the hole or compost them.

Untangle roots in plastic pots only. If roots grow in a matted circle, gently break them out of the mat in two to three places, but don't tear them away from the root ball. They should dangle so they can grow into the existing soil. If your plant is in a biodegradable pot, skip this step.

Set the plant in the hole deeply enough so two-thirds of it is buried. Roots will sprout all along the buried stem to make a stronger plant.

Hosta takeover: Gardens made in the shade

BY SUSAN SMITH-DURISEK McClatchy Newspapers (MCT)

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Chris Miller's life definitely is made in the shade.

At her business — Bluegrass Hosta Farm, just west of Georgetown, Ky. — Miller and her husband, Tom, spend hours with their shade-loving plants. But in the spring and early summer, Chris Miller finds little time to relax. She is hard at work, creating display gardens, propagating plants and welcoming visitors who share a fondness for the more than 950 hosta varieties she grows and markets.

Newcomers looking for their first fantastic foliage plant or, as she quips, seasoned "hostaholics" searching for the next specimen for their collection can find treasures at the farm. While most garden centers have sizable supplies of hostas, Miller's garden is a rare find, where friendly horticultural expertise, artful presentation and a broad selection of one type of plant come together.

Shade-loving, easy-care hostas were brought to the United States from their native China, Korea and Japan around the late 1700s. They have grown in popularity in U.S. gardens during the past 30 years, and breeders have responded with a diversity of variations.

Tom Miller says there now are about 1,500 introductions each year.

They can vary in size from the miniature Blue Mouse Ears to the giant Green Dragonet. Leaf colors can range from pale mint green to electric chartreuse; there are blues with a soft waxy surface, bright golds, whites and even some new red features that combine into endless, subtle variations. Leaf shapes — some floppy rounded hearts, others upright pointed-end ovals — and textures — smooth to corrugated — add to the mix, creating a tempting palette for budding garden designers.

Names tickle the imagination: Marilyn Monroe, with its wavy-edged leaves; Praying Hands, whose upright leaves twist at the top; Woolly Mammoth, with round, corrugated leaves.

Chris Miller says Liberty, which has green-centered leaves balanced by a wide, creamy gold border, "is so showy that it's going to grab people."

Flowers, which take second billing to the leaves, are an added bonus when they appear in midsummer.

"I look for unique and unusual qualities like different forms, improved flower show and coloration when I choose hostas," Chris Miller says.

When the Millers founded their farm in 1993, Tom Miller asked his wife, "What are you going to do, plant all 12 acres?"

Her reply, "I'd like to. I want to plant my own park!"

Outdoor furniture makers aim for eco-friendly design

BY STACY DOWNS
McClatchy Newspapers (MCT)

Outdoor furniture makers are keenly aware that home is the current vacation hot spot.

This season offers an array of unusual pieces in colors, materials and styles to soothe our recession-weary souls. A quick sample: Backyard swings crafted from reclaimed wine barrels; a candy-stick hued collection of modern rockers and gliders made from recycled milk jugs; and canopied daybeds with deep cushioning.

"Consumers are hungry for something different to personalize their environment," said Michelle Lamb, an international home furnishings trend forecaster based in Minneapolis. Outdoor living "is a great way to get more space out of your house, which is useful in this economy when people aren't moving to bigger homes as frequently."

Kansas City designers are raising the bar of outdoor living with locally made furniture. Consumer demand for products crafted from local materials is growing because it's better for the environment and economy. Plus, customers can build one-on-one relationships with artisans to get exactly what they want. Westport-based company Edwin Blue created its first collection, Rise, which includes chaises, chairs, ottomans and side tables.

"We grew up camping and enjoying the outdoors, so it was a natural place to start," says design director Clayton Vogel, who co-founded and co-owns the company with architect Matthew Hufft. The friends, who graduated from the University of Kansas, met in Springfield and worked in New York before forming Edwin Blue in Kansas City.

They plan to launch the line next year at the International Contemporary Furniture Fair in New York City, but the pieces can be ordered and built at their Westport location.

The removable cushions in the Rise line are made by Gearhart Upholstery in Buckner, Mo. The machine-washable covers are lined with swimsuit material and come in dozens of colors, but customers can specify their own fabrics.

Sustainability played a big part in the collection. Sturdy stainless steel frames are built from 45 percent to 65 percent recycled material.

Seatbacks and tabletops are made of "sinker cypress"—trees that sank to the bottoms of rivers between the late 1800s and 1930 in the logging process. Cold river water protected the wood from sunlight, and years of sediment buildup results in a variety of colors in the wood.

"It meant not having to cut down trees, and these are old-growth trees that you can't find much anymore," Vogel said.

Other area outdoor furniture makers also use environmentally friendly methods. Jerad Foster, of Studiobuild in Overland Park, Kan., repurposes scrap wood from a window company.

"Besides being interested in local and green, people want pieces to be flexible and multifunctional," Foster said. "Especially in this economy."

People want benches that can be used for casual entertaining and dining, as well as indoor-outdoor pieces. For example, Foster's picnic table doubles as a conference table.

Andrew Dickson, of Acronym Designs, who shares workshop space with Foster, recently developed modern wooden garden columns.

He initially built them for his wedding in April but thought they'd be innovative for the backyard. The columns—made from recovered mahogany and oil-finished steel—are modular and can be used in three heights.

A beverage or plant rail can be mounted to them, and attachments can form an overhead structure.

Rod Wilcoxon, the owner of Terrace, an outdoor furniture showroom for designers in the Crossroads Arts District, says outdoor furniture isn't reserved just for dining anymore. Chairs now rock, swivel and recline.

"It's all about being comfortable for hours," Wilcoxon said. "Not just 15 minutes."

Neighbors build bluebird-house trail

BY KATHY VAN MULLEKOM
Daily Press (Newport News, Va.) (MCT)

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. — Since the bluebird is the symbol of happiness, one Smithfield, Va., neighborhood should paint a big smiley face on its entrance sign.

Bluebirds are everywhere in the Founders Pointe community, nesting in anything from paper boxes to official bluebird houses.

Their welcome mat is intentional, thanks to the residents who want their community to be a certified wildlife habitat.

In fall 2007, resident Mark Byrd and other homeowners launched the start of a bluebird house trail that now includes 31 houses along a meandering pathway. Additional houses are located in back yards and among cul-de-sac plantings.

East West Realty purchased the materials and residents built some of the boxes; others came from Homes for Bluebirds, a nonprofit bluebird nursery in Bailey, N.C. — www.danfinch.com.

"Bluebirds are an easy sell," Mark said. He's been coordinating the project but his military career now takes him to Texas, where he will continue putting bluebird boxes on his family's cattle ranch.

Mark Byrd and his son, Austin, 5, check out his box on the trail at Founder's Pointe in Suffolk, Va., which is home to a bluebird trail that residents have created and built bluebird houses.

He hopes to one day establish a coast-to-coast bluebird trail.

In the mean time, Mark is turning Founders Pointe bluebirds over to resident Tim Schall.

"I can watch out my window and see bluebirds picking worms out of the soil," said Tim, the father of two kids who love nothing more than being outdoors with dad and the bluebirds.

Equipped with tools to care for the bluebird houses, Mark and Tim take visitors on a trail tour. Austin, 5, joins his father, Mark. Tim's daughter, Chloe, 2, catches up with him later.

The bluebird trail coordinator makes sure volunteers regularly monitor progress in the nests and keep the boxes in good condition. Houses are numbered and information is logged in a notebook, which features photos

Alan Finkelstein (left) and business partner Casey Chorin, of Inmod, an online furniture business, saw growth in 2009 and sales jumped by 50 percent so far this year.

Furniture firm thrives without a showroom

BY CAROL LAWRENCE
The Record (Hackensack N.J.) (MCT)

HACKENSACK, N.J. — Modern-style furniture retailer Inmod survived the recession that closed many furniture stores by letting the customer self-design pillows and bed linens and by adding lower-cost items.

Another reason it persevered, said co-founder and President Alan Finkelstein, is the Harrington Park, N.J.-based business never sold one of its ball chairs or Sputnik chandeliers in a showroom.

To Finkelstein, 33, a website developer, physical showrooms are noticed only by those who drive by or live near them.

"I believe fundamentally the investment you put into marketing on the Internet is a better investment [than into real estate] because you have far more eyes on your marketing efforts than a local brick-and-mortar store would have," said Finkelstein. "I have no limit to where I can sell."

Inmod has no retail space but sells its modern-style furniture and home decor online to consumers, hotel chains, clothing designers, television stations and restaurants.

Last year, as the cascading downturn claimed nearby stores such as Fortunoff and Levitz Furniture, Inmod sales rose almost 8 percent to $3.5 million from 2008.

Backyard gardens provide vital green in lean times

BY P.J. HUFFSTUTTER
Los Angeles Times (MCT)

LOS ANGELES — Locking up his station wagon, the one with the scratched paint and unpaid bills covering the floor mats, Cam Slocum crossed the parking lot and stepped into the kitchen of the swanky French restaurant Melisse in Santa Monica.

A cook set down his knife and walked over to greet the stranger. Slocum held out a Ziploc bag filled with lettuce.

"Hi," said Slocum, 50, his deep voice straining to be heard. "I grow Italian mache in my backyard. It's really good, only $8 a pound. Would you like to buy some?"

A few feet away, chef de cuisine Ken Takayama glanced curiously at the lanky stranger in jeans and a worn plaid shirt. He's heard this sort of pitch before.

"Every day, every week, it's something new," Takayama said. "You name it, they have it."

Since the economy took a dive three years ago, Takayama and others say they've seen more and more people showing up unannounced at restaurants, local markets and small retailers, looking to sell what they've foraged or grown in their backyards.

No one keeps track of the number of people selling their homegrown bounty, but scores of ads have cropped up across the country, hawking local produce, home-filtered honey and backyard eggs.

One Los Angeles resident with a lemon tree posted an offering on Craigslist to let customers "save over 50 percent over Vons, Ralphs, etc. $1.00/pound." At the Orange County Swap Meet, officials said the number of people selling home-canned beans and other homemade edibles grew to 30 vendors this month, up from eight vendors in early 2007.

In the South, hunters are selling venison and wild boar meat. In the Midwest, people are combing the forests for morel mushrooms, which can fetch $10 to $40 a pound.

The trend harkens back to the U.S. depression of 1893, when cities encouraged owners of empty lots to let unemployed people farm them and sell the excess produce, said Laura Lawson, an associate professor of landscape architecture at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

"It was seen as engendering the capitalist ideal of this country, that people were bettering themselves by being outside and working," Lawson said.

Weigh degree against debt

Q: My wife wants to go back to school to complete her degree. Right now, we're on Baby Step 2 of your plan, and we're about one year away from being debt-free, except for our house. Should we work the budget to cash flow her going back to school now, or wait until we're out of debt and have our emergency fund in place? — Scott

A: If you can find room in your budget to pay for it, and all it does is slow down the getting-out-of-debt process a little bit, then I think it's a great idea. The main thing is that I don't want you taking on any more debt to make it happen. You guys can see light at the end of the tunnel right now, so I don't want you taking a big leap backward by piling on a bunch of student loans.

Education with a purpose is a fabulous thing. I'm all about school and learning, but the idea of going to college just to collect degrees is a little silly.

Knowledge — not degrees — is the currency of the new millennium. The more you know, the more tools you have in your belt. That's why I still read like a maniac. It helps me stay up to speed with things I need to know to do my job better.

Q: You recommend investing 15 percent of your income into Roth IRAs and other pre-tax retirement plans. Should you count your employer's company match as part of that percentage? — Ben

A: You can, but I'd prefer that you didn't. Employers and employment situations can change at the drop of a hat. I'd rather see you put in 15 percent. That way, you don't have to rely on someone else to complete your retirement savings plan. It's not your employer's responsibility — or any one else's — to make sure you have money to live on in your old age. Stick 15 percent in there yourself, Ben. Then, if your employer does match workplace contributions, it'll be that much sweeter.

Q: I'm a college student in Utah, and I compete with lots of other students for summer jobs. Do you have any suggestions for debt-killing work? — Anonymous

A: My best suggestion for debt-killing work in that kind of situation has always been self-employment. You'll make a lot more money cutting grass, walking dogs or detailing cars. You can control your time, too. Plus, you'll make a lot more per hour than you will at any mall job. By the time they take taxes and everything out of that, you'll almost wish you hadn't bothered.

A few years ago, I knew a couple of college guys who pooled their money and bought a pressure washer and some other equipment to start a business. They came to the house, washed and re-sealed our driveway, and I paid them a few hundred dollars a piece for the job. It took all day, but they walked away with their pockets full of money. You'd have to flip a lot of burgers to match that.

You can make some serious summer cash if you'll look at yourself as a small-business owner and not someone's employee. I'm not going to lie to you. If you take this route, you're probably going to be involved in some pretty hard work. But the truth is, you'll never make really good money without doing some pretty hard work.

Program steps up women's skills

FOR MORE INFORMATION about Step-Up for Women, call Kristina Szczyrbak at 304-598-0114, or visit www.womenwork.org.

BY EMILY EVERETT
For The Dominion Post

West Virginia Women Work! (WVWW!) offers Step-Up for Women, an 11-week construction-training program for those interested in working in the construction industry as a career.

"[We do this] to help our graduates bridge that gap between unemployment or underemployment to their first construction job," said Kristina Szczyrbak, job developer and program coordinator for WVWW!

During training, students cycle through carpentry, electrical wiring and plumbing units.

"They don't pick one, they get all three," Szczyrbak said. "We combine those hands-on topics with what we call the 'Women's Resources' topics in the classroom. These include effective communication, budgeting/credit, resume writing, where to look for work, what to say/do when job hunting, interviewing, guest speakers [graduates and employers], and field trips, to name a few."

The program is offered at three training sites in the state: Charleston, Martinsburg and the headquarters in Morgantown.

Women can apply to the program through an application process, and no previous construction experience is required. The classes come at no cost to students, and the program also provides transportation reimbursement of 12 cents per mile along with a $55 clothing reimbursement and free clothes/steel-toed work boots during the training. When students graduate, they receive a set of tools. Another perk students receive is a gym membership, so they're physically able to perform construction work. Szczyrbak said it's important that they actually go to the gym to strength train during class time.

And it's all part of WVWW!, "A statewide nonprofit organization that advocates education, employment and economic equity for all women," according to organization information, helping them enter the work force and advance in jobs that will lead to self-sufficiency. The program uses recruitment, training, referrals, placements, networking, advocacy, retention activities and public workshops as parts of its plan.

"Each site offers the program twice a year, once in the spring and once in the fall. The north-central site works in partnership with Pierpont Community and Technical College to offer a carpenter helper certificate to graduates. Here in north central, classes are Monday through Thursday from 9 am to 5:30 pm in Morgantown on Van Voorhis Road," Szczyrbak said.

Because WVWW offers employment-based training, its focus is on job placement assistance. The Morgantown branch has maintained at least an 88 percent placement rate for the last two program years (or four classes, with last year's spring class having a placement rate of 92 percent).

Szczyrbak added that 62 percent of those students entered into a union apprenticeship program, which was due in part to the math review that they completed during the course to prepare for the union exams and to apply on the job site.

Recently, the program has received grant funds from the Appalachian Regional Commission to teach students the basics of "green building," which will provide them with a competitive edge in the "green construction" job market.

"Over the past couple of classes we have been working to incorporate 'green building' concepts into the Step Up for Women curriculum. The last class participated in a 'Green Advantage' prep course instructed by Chris Haddox, visiting assistant professor of WVU's Division of Design and Merchandising, and then our students took the 'Green Advantage' certification exam," said Szczyrbak.

The current Step-Up for Women class is working to apply some of the concepts introduced by the curriculum, including solar energy.

Matt Sherald, owner of PIMBY, an alternative energy company based in Thomas, W.Va., recently offered students a two-day workshop that focused on the basics of understanding and applying solar energy.

"The students participated in both a classroom lecture and a full day of hands-on practice installing the solar panels and electrical boxes with Matt Sherald's guidance," Szczyrbak said. "They installed them on one of the buildings that the students constructed during the carpentry portion of the training program."

WVWW! works with several other organizations, including MTEC for the welding portion of training, Morgantown Adult Learning Center for student testing, the West Virginia Division of Highways and Marion and Monongalia county branches of Habitat for Humanity, among others.

"It was a wonderful program that gave me the confidence I needed," said Kimberly Fabery, a spring 2010 student. "[Kristina] is very good at what she does; she assisted me through every step of the process, including building my resume, applying for a job and obtaining a job."

The help doesn't stop there. Fabery said program administrators tell students to keep in touch with Step-Up for Women even after finding a job.

"[Kristina] welcomes us to come back if we need help or if we're changing jobs," Fabery said. "During my time as a student, women who graduated the program would come and talk about what they're doing now. I liked that these women were in the same place I was; I could relate to them."

The next Step-Up for Women course will begin in September, and the program is currently accepting applications.

Recruiter's advice: Keep in touch to stand out in job market

BY KIRSTEN VALLE
(MCT)

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Mark Frietch has seen the labor market from both sides: As a recruiter for large organizations and, when he lost his job at Wachovia last year, as one of the thousands of the Charlotte region's unemployed.

Frietch launched his own business, TAC Services LLC, in July, advising small companies on the best ways to attract and retain talent, and coaching job candidates on the best ways to stand out in the crowded job market. And he's worked a series of contract positions since then, recruiting for companies such as GMAC, Ingersoll Rand and, now, Time Warner Cable.

Frietch spoke with McClatchy Newspapers recently about the job market, how to start the search and the biggest mistake job-seekers make. Questions and answers have been edited for brevity and clarity.

Q: What are some tips for job-seekers, especially those who are new to the area?

A: Don't be ashamed. Don't get frustrated. And follow up, follow up, follow up — that's key.

I think definitely leveraging social media, like LinkedIn. Say, "Hey, I'm new to the area and looking to build my network." They may not be a hiring manager; they may not know of anything, but you can start getting a better lay of the land by just sitting down and talking.

Keep in touch. I do my best to remember people's birthdays and significant events, whether it be a wedding, or that they're taking a ski trip in the Alps. I keep all those notes, and then you can say,

"Let's get together for a cup of coffee and find out how your ski trip went." It's taking a personal interest in somebody else, and then they're going to take a personal interest in you.

I always keep an updated resume. If you have a smart phone, e-mail it to yourself. That way you always have a copy of it.

CareerBuilder and Monster, they're great for high-volume type of roles; however, I think you've got to be out there and in front of the hiring manager and recruiter. It's very important to market yourself and show that you've got that value for the organization.

Q: What can candidates do to stand out?

A: Try to find out who the hiring manager is, and maybe say, "Hey, I applied for your job. I want to sit down and introduce myself." Take that initiative — it goes a long way. A person I was connected with when I was at GMAC sent me a message and said, "Congrats on your new role; if you see any positions that I could be a good fit for, please keep me in mind." It just so happened that, within days, I got a job that fit her background. I presented her to the client and said, "I think this is the person you're going to hire."

It wasn't because I knew a lot about her work ... but she took the initiative and ended up getting hired.

You see the news stories about the billboards with a link to your resume, people wearing the placards, the T-shirts with their resume — that's all well and good, but I think it comes down to the relationships you have.

WATERCOOLER

How do you go from temp to full time?

BY ERIN CONROY
AP Business Writer

CONTRACT WORK and temporary employment are on the rise as the economy improves, especially for companies that need to meet increased demand but are hesitant to commit to permanent employees and higher benefit costs.

Working a temp job can be a great opportunity to keep skills current and make new networking contacts while continuing to look for permanent employment. But those seeking to turn these positions into full-time jobs need to be cautious, says Tim Schoonover, chairman of career consulting firm OI Partners.

"There are often no guarantees and no promises that they will be hired full-time even if suitable openings arise," Schoonover said. "The downside of contract work is there is the possibility that it can detract from a regular job search and create false hope about a full-time job."

OI Partners offers this advice for making the most out of your short-time position and potentially making a smooth transition into permanent work:

■ Ask up front if you can apply for full-time openings that arise during your contract period.

■ Aim to out-perform full-time employees who are doing the same or similar jobs as you.

■ Understand the reason for the contract job and the circumstances surrounding the position. This will help you determine whether there is a future with the company.

■ Meet as many key people in the organization as you can. Sit in on staff meetings and let it be known what you are doing for the organization, as well as your past background, experience, and accomplishments.

■ Keep in contact with people who recruit for the company, as well as employees in other departments.

■ Complete any projects you are working on, even if you aren't hired. "Leaving projects unfinished will hurt you if you need to be a contract worker again or want a reference for your work," said Schoonover.

Moving to the big city

You've just graduated from college and are ready to settle down, find a job and start a new chapter of your life. Now you just need to grab a map, close your eyes and drop your finger.

Not so fast. For new grads feeling the pressure of deciding where to live after college, Apartment.com and CareerRookie.com have released a list of the top 10 cities for young adults. The roster is based on the inventory of jobs requiring less than one year of experience, the average cost of rent for a one-bedroom apartment and the highest concentration of young adults between the ages of 20 and 24.

"Finding an affordable apartment and a good job may determine where to live, but it's also important to look at cities offering the culture and lifestyle these young adults enjoy," said Tammy Kotula, spokeswoman for Apartments.com.

The best cities, including the average rent for a one-bedroom apartment:

1. Atlanta, $723
2. Phoenix, $669
3. Denver, $779
4. Dallas, $740
5. Boston, $1,275
6. Philadelphia, $938
7. New York, $1,366
8. Cincinnati, $613
9. Baltimore, $1,041
10. Los Angeles, $1,319

Give hot jobs a warm welcome

BY DIANE STAFFORD

McClatchy Newspapers (MCT)

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Is your current job going the way of the dinosaur?

Are you trying to decide what college classes or training you should take to prepare for a promising career?

Goals for your work life should depend mightily on your personal skills, aptitude and interests. There's no sense aiming for a job that you wouldn't be passionate about or be very good at doing.

But you also should pay attention to what the hot jobs or growth industries are. There's no sense preparing for your dream job if it won't exist or the opportunities are severely limited.

So here are some occupational areas that stand a good chance of needing you, both in the near and long term:

■ Elder care: As the population ages, there's an ever-growing demand for more nurses, nursing assistants, nursing home workers, therapists, chronic disease managers, home health aides and transportation services devoted to the elderly.

■ Social and mobile media: Cell phones and other multifunction devices are proliferating like wildfire. Device engineering, software application development and customer service, including call centers, go hand in hand with every new device or program.

■ Translation services and English-as-a-second-language education: Global business deals and growing immigrant populations need bilingual help, both to learn English and to transact business in other languages. One niche: translating to help people obtain health care services.

■ "Green" jobs: Jobs in wind and solar energy, energy-efficient construction, public transportation, environmentally friendly manufacturing and "sustainability" regulation are in growth mode.

■ Security and public safety: From home security equipment sales and manufacturing to private security companies to government homeland security, the field is burgeoning.

■ Accounting: Accountants, auditors and forensic accountants (fraud investigators) are needed in accounting firms, within businesses and in the government.

■ Sales and marketing: No matter the industry, organization or product, the word has to get out.

Market leaves lawyers far from Easy Street

BY ROCHELLE OLSON

Star Tribune (Minneapolis) (MCT)

MINNEAPOLIS — New lawyer John Kay was on the fast track. He graduated from Pepperdine University with honors. He speaks fluent Korean and is proficient in Mandarin Chinese.

But a year after graduating, he lives with his wife and young kids in his parents' Prior Lake, Minn., basement. The $160,000-a-year job that a big Los Angeles firm offered him when he was in school disappeared during the economic downturn. He surfs the Internet for jobs while his wife works.

He hopes a job comes before he must start repaying $100,000 in student loans.

A few years ago, a law degree was practically a ticket to a comfortable life. The recession has changed that for most new graduates. Demand may be up for defense attorneys for white-collar thieves, but mergers and acquisitions are down, and corporations have trimmed legal budgets. Older lawyers postponed retirement, and most firms have less to do.

This week, law schools in Minnesota and beyond are sending graduates into the grimmest job market in decades. "I thought I had really hit the big time," Kay said. "Now the big joke is: 'You'll be lucky if you retire making [what] they offered you to start.'"

Websites such as avovethelaw.com and minnesotalawyer.com are rife with discussions under headlines such as, "Those jobs are going, and they're not coming back." The sites ask whether a law degree is still worth the expense. School administrators say it is, but they add that today's graduates need to search harder and perhaps longer.

The University of Minnesota Law School's website claims 97 percent of even those jobs are hard to get.

"I have no problem paying my dues," Kay said. "The problem is, I can't at the bottom."

The National Association for Law Placement on Thursday released a survey showing an overall employment rate of 89 percent of 2009 graduates for whom status was known. That's 3 percentage points below 2007's historic high and the lowest rate since the mid-1990s. The group noted that the new number reflects increases in temporary and part-time employment.

In good times, top law students were almost guaranteed good jobs based on first-year grades and their experience as summer associates. In the recession, bigger firms decreased hiring by about half, said Mark Greiner, hiring partner at Fredrikson and Byron in downtown Minneapolis. His firm hired seven students for the summer, with plans to take them on permanently after they graduate. That's about five fewer than before the recession.

Greiner graduated 20 years ago and said the current market is the worst he has seen. Adding to pressure in Minnesota has been the return of young lawyers who lost jobs on the coasts, where firms were hit harder.

For top graduates, the profession is still "an embarrassment of riches," Greiner said. But he added that just a notch below them, "even good students are having a tough time."

Not buying a toaster

Matt Nelson would have earned $145,000 his first year at a Milwaukee firm. But duty called, and while he was serving as an Army paralegal in Iraq, Milwaukee withdrew its offer.

"A lot of law students have a romantic vision of what they're going to do when they go to law school, but I'm not bitter," said Nelson, who also is a software engineer. "A lot of people are suffering."

Bridgid Dowdal, assistant dean for career and professional development at William Mitchell College of Law in St. Paul, said graduating is no longer enough. Students must network, volunteer at legal clinics, intern for firms and clerk for judges, Dowdal said, adding that a good attitude is a huge plus.

"Do I see a grim future? Not for the people who are real hustlers," she said.

Darcy Sherman, 32, directed a trial clinic at the University of Minnesota before graduating in 2008. She had been a fraud investigator. She wants to be a prosecutor, but jobs are scarce in the public sector; too. She wishes she had had the benefit of a realistic cost-benefit analysis before going to law school.

"I can find information on a $15 toaster, but if you want to go $100,000 in debt, there's no information," she said.

After a year of part-time work, she landed a job earning $41,000 as a judge's clerk. For her; the jury is still out on whether going to law school was smart.

"I hope I have a definitive answer in 10 years, where I say, 'Oh, this is great. I love what I do,'" she said.

Problem with co-worker vacation coverage calls for 'managing up'

Q: Our team recently had a lot of problems while one person was on vacation. No one had been given responsibility for "Beth's" duties, so her calls were transferred to anyone who was available. Unfortunately, some of the calls were not handled well, and that's when the finger-pointing started. Our supervisor is blaming the team for these problems, even though she never gave us any direction on how to handle the calls. When we try to explain that we've never been trained on Beth's responsibilities, she just says "You need to be better team players." What should we do now?

A: This is a great opportunity to practice "managing up." Since you apparently have a hands-off supervisor who doesn't plan well, the group must try to compensate for her weaknesses. Fortunately, an effective team of colleagues can often make up for ineffective management. Instead of arguing about the recent phone debacle, take steps to prevent a repeat performance. First, the team should draft a call transfer procedure that can be used whenever someone is out. Then make a group proposal to your boss, emphasizing the benefits of this process.

For example: "As you know, we've never had a system for handling calls when a team member is absent. To correct this problem, we're proposing a phone coverage plan that will prevent multiple transfers and insure that customers receive accurate information. We'd like you to review it and give us your opinion."

If your supervisor is smart, she will welcome this solution and applaud your initiative. But if she seems indifferent, go ahead and implement the plan yourselves. Improving telephone coverage probably doesn't require her involvement.

Q: After being promoted and given a raise, I discovered that I was actually making less money. Because I am now an executive assistant, I have been reclassified from hourly to salaried. This means that I no longer receive overtime, so my take-home pay is less than before. How should I approach my manager about this?

A: Your boss may have no idea that the promotion actually reduced your income. Although this is a common occurrence, many managers don't understand the financial impact of removing overtime pay. To address the issue, simply explain the problem and ask how it might be solved. Just be sure to express appreciation for the promotion, since you don't want to seem ungrateful. For example: "I'm really pleased about being an executive assistant, and I appreciate your making this promotion possible. I do have one concern, though. I was surprised to find that my pay is actually lower, because I'm no longer receiving overtime. Is there a way to correct this?"

If you work for a large organization, your manager might need to consult human resources about compensation options. But if this is a small company, your boss may have the power to make a salary adjustment.

Know the recession work slang

PAY CUTS, PAY FREEZES and job losses have in the last 2 1/2 years sent a lot more people scrounging for coupons and other cost-saving deals.

Someone pointed me to www.couponsherpa.com — clever name, that — which carries a load of online coupon information.

The site also provides links to articles, and I happened on this one:

"25 Recessionista Slang Terms You Need To Know."

I occasionally write columns blasting business buzzwords, those irritating words that pepper the workplace. I admit defeat in the war against many of them.

So let's take a fun foray instead into words born from double-digit unemployment and wage stagnation. They're not buzzwords yet, but they have a dose of cleverness that suggests longevity.

By now, everyone's heard of staycations — when you can't afford an out-of-town trip.

And the notion of permatemping has entered the vernacular; there's even labor law about it.

But did you know that you can be decruited when a job offer is withdrawn before you've begun to work?

That's as opposed to getting a job-job — new lingo for a "real" job — full time, with benefits.

Oh, for the good old days of prairie dogging, when you'd find a sea of heads popping up above cubicle partitions at the mention of free food.

We don't need recession porn to show us that many of those cubicles aren't populated anymore. And, in many workplaces, the free food awaits a comeback — unless we bring it ourselves.

Telecommuting is on the rise

BY CINDY KRISCHER GOODMAN
McClatchy Newspapers (MCT)

When you can read your e-mail at the beach, hold a videoconference in your dining room and chat with a co-worker from a doctor's waiting room, is there finally a new definition of "the office"?

The numbers say yes. Teleworking — working remotely at least one day a week — is on the rise, driven by businesses desperate to cut costs, a new emphasis on the green movement and the increasing availability of a high-speed Internet connection. Today, more than 34 million U.S. adults telecommute at least occasionally, and that number is expected to swell to 63 million — or 43 percent of U.S. workers — by 2016.

"The recession just may have moved teleworking from being a cushy perk to becoming a business necessity," Miami employment attorney Richard Tuschman of Epstein Becker Green, recently told a group of employers considering teleworker arrangements.

Managers typically resist out of fear of losing control of employees.

But now, businesses desperate to save money on office space or reluctant to pay a new hire to relocate are allowing workers, sometimes even forcing workers, to set up a home or virtual office — either on a part-time or a full-time basis. If telework is the future, here's a blueprint for success:

Be creative

Needing more space, Western Union looked for options to expansion. It launched a pilot program in 2008 called iFlex to allow 15 percent of its South Florida workforce to telework up to three days a week. The company crunched the numbers and figured out it saves 3.2 million over five years in real estate costs and other expenses.

Develop criteria

Tuschman, the lawyer, recommends having a telework policy and making it clear who is eligible to work out of the office. Someone who needs a lot of prodding would not be a good candidate.

Ken Erdberg, a Western Union information technology director, supervises two teleworkers and believes specific management skills are necessary.

Technology

Russell Correa, a human resources consultant, works remotely from South Florida for a New York firm. He previously worked at Corporate Counseling Associates' main office.

Correa uses instant messaging and video chatting for spontaneous conversation with co-workers.

GRADS ON THE HUNT FOR THAT ELUSIVE JOB

As the U.S. unemployment rate teeters at just under 10 percent, let's face it: It's a scary time to graduate. With thousands of Americans facing unemployment despite their long histories in the work force, you're lucky if you're graduating with a job lined up.

Getting hired certainly isn't as easy as it used to be, but there are ways to rise to the occasion. And let's look on the bright side: According to a March 9 Bureau of Labor Statistics release, there were 2.7 million job openings on the last business day in January, boosting that rate to 2.1 percent.

By narrowing in on the fields and companies that are hiring, specializing your networking skills and gaining some life experience, landing the job of your dreams is not so far out of reach.

BY MOLLY KLINEFELTER, MCCLATCHY-TRIBUNE

FINDING A JOB

Are you unsure about what field you want to break into but know you want to work as soon as possible? You're in luck, because according to Forbes (www.forbes.com), these three professions are hiring now:

✓ Paralegal at bankruptcy or foreclosure firm. These firms are especially busy in this economy, which means they need a bigger staff. Generally, the legal field is no longer firing, and as of April 1, 26 percent of the field said they would be hiring. The positions available range from administrative and support staff to high-paid lawyers.

✓ Sales and business development. As of the second quarter, 10 percent of the field plans to hire additional staff.

✓ Information technology. The industry comes in third, with 5 percent hiring by April.

Who's not hiring:

✗ Finance and accounting. Forbes says negative 1 percent of these fields have the intention of hiring right now.

If you'd rather take a different approach to getting hired, consider researching individual companies. Some are known to treat employees better than others, and many have higher hiring rates than others. CNN Money (<http://money.cnn.com>) has the top five companies to work for, and the companies hiring now.

TOP COMPANIES TO WORK FOR:

✓ SAS: The world's largest privately owned software company, this employer offers its staff great benefits. Included are high-quality child care at $410 a month, 90 percent coverage of the health care premium, unlimited sick days, a free medical center staffed by four physicians and 10 nurse practitioners, a free 66,000 square foot fitness center and natatorium, a lending library and a summer camp for children. On top of that, the company's turnover is the nation's lowest at 2 percent.

✓ Edward Jones: Also on the list of companies hiring now, this investment adviser company hasn't laid off a single employee or closed any of its 12,615 offices. Impressive, huh?

✓ Wegmans Food Markets: This grocery company was rated one of the best in the nation, and has astonishingly never had a layoff in its 94-year history.

✓ Google: They're hiring again! Reports say Google will add thousands of employees in 2010. The company also added a stock-option exchange program last year to help employees with underwater options. And music to your ears, 20 percent of each employees' time is devoted to a project of his or her choosing.

✓ Nugget Market: This lesser-known supermarket chain has frequent employee-appreciation events. Another perk? Upon being hired, employees receive cards for 10 percent off of $500 of groceries every month.

COMPANIES HIRING NOW:

✓ Edward Jones: The company has more than 600 openings for financial advisors and branch office administrators. They're looking for self-starters who put the client's interests first and like working with and helping people. Their advice to prospective employees? Make sure you understand the job, have past stable work experience and an appropriate commitment level.

✓ Wegmans Food Markets: Also one of the best companies to work for, the grocery chain has 1,500 openings for jobs such as customer-service team members, chefs, team leaders and department managers. They're looking for food enthusiasts and people who are passionate about good service. Their perfect employee is someone committed to continuous learning, with diverse experiences who exemplifies the values of caring for and respecting others.

✓ Google: In addition to being one of the top companies to work for, Google has 1,000 openings in software engineering, user-experience researching, product marketing, finance and human resources. They want people who thrive in ambiguous situations and are energized by complex challenges. An employee must be passionate about technology and committed to the community.

✓ Qualcomm: This software designer has more than 600 openings for engineering and business positions including software engineers, digital design engineers, patent counselors, architects and product marketing directors. They're looking for people with a passion for technology and a desire to innovate. Their advice? Do research on the company and be self-aware.

✓ Cisco: With close to 600 openings, this company is offering careers in engineering and design organization, services, product managing, sales, finance, marketing, IT, manufacturing, supply chain and human resources. They want strong collaborators who have a focus on execution and know the needs of organization. They advise prospective employers to ask good questions at the interview.

MARKET YOURSELF

Even with all this knowledge, it can be hard to land a job, especially in this economy. These tips from Yahoo! Hot Jobs (<http://hotjobs.yahoo.com>) will assist you in making connections all over the business world.

✓ Personalize your resume. For every job you apply to, alter your resume a bit to emphasize the qualities that prospective employer is looking for. That way, your resume will pop off the page instead of getting lost in an inbox.

✓ Network, network, network. Use your public interactions as a way to make connections. Employers agree they'd rather hire someone they know than a complete stranger.

✓ Use the Web. The Internet is a huge resource for employers, and by registering with career Web sites and doing your research on specific companies, you'll be more educated than your competition.

✓ Follow up. Whether you've just interviewed with a prospective employer or met a possible connection at the grocery store, e-mail or call them within a few days to thank them or further discuss your career. This way, your name won't fade out of their mind.

✓ Be patient. Finding a job isn't easy, so don't expect to be employed within a month. Don't give up if you haven't heard back from prospective employers; just be more persistent.

NETWORKING

Does the word "networking" scare the living daylights out of you? It's not as hard as it seems. "Making It in the City," a book and Web site (www.makingitinthecity.com) founded by writer Adina Kalish Neufeld to help others adapt to living in a big city with no money, resources or connections, gives the basic networking tips.

✓ The Golden Rule: Multiply your connections. When you meet someone helpful, ask him or her for five other names and their contact information.

✓ Keep your hands and mouth free. It's hard to meet people when you're holding a plate and your mouth is full of food.

✓ Do your research. Know who the top people are and what's going on in the field. That way, if you unexpectedly run into a connection at Starbucks, you'll have something to talk about.

✓ Know the guest list. Before an event, find out who's going to be there so you can practice your conversation and read up on a particular person.

✓ Introduce yourself. People will be impressed if you know who they are and take the initiative to approach them. Be honest and confident, but avoid sounding over-enthusiastic.

✓ Ask about them. People love talking about themselves, and if you ask them advice on how to break into the business, they'll probably tell you how they did it.

✓ Dress for the occasion. Don't show up in a suit and tie if you're going to a backyard barbecue. Wear something comfortable. You don't want to be in scratchy fabric or too-tight pants; it'll end up making you feel insecure.

✓ Assert yourself without being annoying. Don't take up too much of someone's time, but ask if you can contact them in the future, or if they can give you someone's information that may be of interest to you.

✓ Practice your handshake! Many people judge people at first solely on how they shake hands.

✓ Say their name. Not only will this help you remember their name, but they'll be impressed you remembered, as well.

✓ Bring your resume and business card. You never know when you'll need it.

✓ Don't get discouraged. If you're not the best conversationalist, it's OK. Not everyone can talk to a wall. Keep it one-on-one so you'll feel more comfortable.

OPTIONS OTHER THAN A JOB

Although it's a scary thought, you may not get a job right after you graduate. But instead of sitting on your couch eating Cheetos waiting for a job to fall into your lap, try doing something productive that also will boost your resume.

✓ Get an internship. Many companies won't even hire you unless you've interned with their company, so why not look at an internship as an opportunity to impress your bosses and potentially score a full-time gig at the end of the trial run?

✓ Travel the world. You're young and most likely single, so what better time to travel the world? After you land a full-time job and start a family, there may not be another opportunity to scale the Alps, surf in Australia or visit the Queen of England.

✓ Do nonprofit work. Have you always wanted to build houses in a developing country or teach children English? Take your time off as a blessing, because you can do that now. Not only will the experience be personally rewarding, but it also may impress potential employers.

Subaru's 2010 Legacy has pricing issues

BY MARK PHELAN
Detroit Free Press (MCT)

Subaru's 2010 Legacy 2.5 GT Limited struggles with a high price that neither the brand's standard all-wheel drive nor its reputation for durability can overcome.

The car costs more than obvious competitors like the all-wheel drive Ford Fusion, front-wheel drive Mazda 6 and Toyota Camry and even the base versions of luxury cars like the Audi A4 and BMW 3-series.

The Legacy GT Limited's all-wheel drive system transmits power smoothly from a muscular 265-horsepower turbocharged horizontally opposed four-cylinder engine.

A thirst for pricey premium fuel and a balky manual transmission reduce this sporty version of the Legacy's charm. A small trunk and poor integration of the car's audio and hands-free phone systems limit its practical appeal.

While less expensive models of the Legacy offer Subaru's hallmark value and capability, the 2.5 GT Limited is undone by better cars at lower prices.

The well-equipped Legacy 2.5 GT Limited I tested cost $33,251, thanks to options that included a sunroof, iPod-compatible stereo and backup camera. All prices exclude destination charges.

However, the price of the Legacy I tested puts some very good luxury cars into play, including the least expensive all-wheel drive model of the Audi A4 at $32,350 and the rear-drive BMW 328i at $33,150.

Weighing against that decision are the Legacy's rather anonymous looks, a trunk that's smaller than those in the Fusion or Mazda 6, and several features Subaru could have executed better.

The Legacy GT's EPA rating of 18 mpg in the city and 25 mpg on the highway trails its front-wheel drive competitors.

The Legacy's optional sunroof reduces passenger volume from 103 cubic feet to 100 cubic feet, smaller than the Fusion, Camry or Mazda 6. The 14.7-cubic-foot trunk is small. A narrow opening reduces the trunk's ability to accommodate large objects.

The turbocharged, horizontally opposed four-cylinder engine delivers good power for smooth acceleration from 2,000 rpm.

The somewhat-balky six-speed manual transmission has an extremely tight shift pattern.

Obama: Don't exempt auto dealers from consumer protection agency

BY JUSTIN HYDE
Detroit Free Press (MCT)

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama recently warned that exempting auto dealers from a new consumer protection agency would hurt buyers and let dealers continue “deceptive practices.”

The nation's 20,000 new-car dealers have blitzed Capitol Hill over the past two weeks seeking to be cut free from the agency that would oversee consumer lending, part of a package of financial reforms expected to move through the Senate over the next several days. They're backing an amendment by Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., that would exempt auto dealers' lending from new oversight that would still apply to banks and finance companies like Ally Bank, the former GMAC. In his statement, Obama said leaving dealers out of the bill would let them “inflate rates, insert hidden fees into the fine print of paperwork, and include expensive add-ons that catch purchasers by surprise. “This amendment guts provisions that empower consumers with clear information that allows them to make the financial decisions that work best for them and simply encourages misleading sales tactics that hurt American consumers,” Obama said. Dealers have maintained that their finance businesses were already covered by federal and state regulators, and did not deserve new regulations meant to crack down on abuses by Wall Street banks that led to the 2008 credit crisis which spurred a global recession.

Reader wonders why car's wheel broke off

DEAR TOM AND RAY: Two weeks ago while traveling down a city street, my car, a Volvo S80, suddenly swerved and almost flew into a lamp-post. A man driving behind me said he saw the right front wheel come off just before the car swerved. If he had not seen the wheel fall off, I would not have known what had happened. My insurance has covered everything, as the car was a total loss, but neither the insurance company nor the Volvo shop where it was towed could give any explanation for this accident. Fortunately, no one was on the sidewalk or in the street to be hit by the wheel. Nonetheless, I am very disturbed not to know what caused this. Have you any ideas or explanations? Thank you. — Judy say that most likely, the cause is previous overtightening. If a shop isn't careful to measure its torque, it easily can overtighten a bolt, which stretches it, and that causes the metal to fatigue and weaken. And the more times you overtighten it — putting it on and taking it off — the weaker the metal gets.

RAY: Whenever we have more than one wheel bolt break on a car, we replace all 20 of them. We don't even give the customer a choice. We figure if two of them were overtightened and are ready to break, they probably all were overtightened and are ready to break.

TOM: And in your situation, you might have had one that broke without your knowing it. Then you had four doing the job of five.

RAY: That increased the stress on the remaining four, and soon another one gave way. Then you had three doing the job of five.

TOM: And you never would notice this until the last bolt or two can't hold on anymore, and the wheel falls off.

RAY: This is something that you hope your regular repair shop would catch in advance when it does things like inspect your brakes.

GPS upgrades aim to see, do more

BY W.J. HENNIGAN
Los Angeles Times (MCT)

LOS ANGELES — Without it, ATMs would stop spitting out cash, Wall Street could blunder billions of dollars in stock trades and clueless drivers would get lost.

Most people may associate the Global Positioning System with the navigation devices that are becoming standard equipment on new cars. But GPS has become a nerve center for the 21st century rivaling the Internet — enabling cargo companies to track shipments, guiding firefighters to hot spots and even helping people find lost dogs.

"It's a ubiquitous utility that everybody takes for granted now," said Bradford W. Parkinson.

He should know. Three decades ago, as a baby-faced Air Force colonel just out of the Vietnam War, Parkinson led the Pentagon team that developed GPS at a military base in El Segundo, Calif.

Technician Gladys Wickering looks over Boeing's second GPSIIIF satellite being built in El Segundo, Calif.

Now, scientists and engineers — including those at a sprawling satellite-making factory in El Segundo — are developing an $8-billion GPS upgrade that will make the system more reliable, more widespread and much more accurate.

The new system is designed to pinpoint a location within an arm's length, compared with a margin of error of 20 feet or more today. With that kind of precision, a GPS-enabled mobile phone could guide you right to the front steps of Starbucks, rather than somewhere on the block. "This new system has the potential to deliver capabilities we haven't seen yet," said Marco Caceres, senior space analyst for aerospace research firm Teal Group. "Because GPS touches so many industries, it's hard to imagine what industry wouldn't be affected."

The 24 satellites that make up the GPS constellation — many of them built at the former Rockwell plant in Seal Beach — will be replaced one by one. The first replacement was scheduled to be launched from Cape Canaveral this weekend. The overhaul will take a decade and is being overseen by engineers at Los Angeles Air Force Base in El Segundo, where Parkinson and his team developed the current system.

"We know that the world relies on GPS," said Col. David B. Goldstein, the chief engineer for the upgrade.

Startup ready to challenge big automakers

BY STEVEN COLE SMITH
The Orlando Sentinel (MCT)

ROCKLEDGE, Fla. — R.J. Scaringe has spent years declining to discuss his new automotive company, Avera Motors, and now that it's finally time to talk, he can barely stop. But he does not want Avera to be one of those new car companies that advance a big news conference, shows a sketch of a new vehicle, announces grand plans for a factory and marketing — then is never heard from again.

Scaringe declines to make promises he can't keep.

That you haven't heard of Avera — a blend of "America," and "verde," as in green, and "terra," meaning earth — likely leads you to think that the company isn't that far along with plans to build a new sports coupe here in Central Florida.

You would be wrong. Scaringe, 27, president and chief executive officer of Avera, has quietly hired about 15 engineers who have worked for companies such as Chrysler, Mitsubishi, Mercedes-Benz and Roush Industries. They have already designed the car's exterior, interior, suspension and powertrain, and they have a full-sized clay model of the car in the studio — which I was allowed to see but not photograph. It looks sort of like a new Mitsubishi Eclipse, but smaller.

Scaringe said the car will be fun to drive, carry four people, and according to the company's fledgling website, get twice the mileage of today's hybrids. That's the only claim I heard during my visit to the company that I question, because double a Toyota Prius would be close to 100 miles per gallon.

The Avera will likely be a diesel hybrid. The car will be mid-engined — meaning the engine is right behind the rear seat — and rear-wheel-drive, regarded as the optimum drivetrain configuration for performance and handling by companies such as Ferrari and Lamborghini. The basic platform would be "flexible," Scaringe said, meaning that once the Avera sports coupe is under way, the platform could support, say, a two-seat convertible, a small SUV or any number of vehicles.

June is National Fruit, Vegetable Month

SUMMERTIME means warm weather, beautiful landscape, and fresh fruits and vegetables. June is designated as National Fruit and Vegetable Month. Fresh fruits and veggies can be found at local farmers markets, the grocery store, and roadside stands.

BECCA FINT-CLARK

Although the best time to get fresh produce in West Virginia tends to be July and August, there are a multitude of delicious and fresh vegetables and fruit available in June.

This includes both cucumbers and tomatoes, my two favorite summertime foods. The Morgantown Farmers Market website offers a wealth of information, including a chart that shows which items will typically be sold at the market during each of the summer months. The website is located at morgantownfarmers.org. The Morgantown Farmers Market is open every Saturday from now until Nov.

6. It is located on Spruce Street in downtown Morgantown and is open from 8:30 a.m.-noon.

According to the Morgantown Farmers Market website, all the products sold at the market are grown or made within 50 miles of Morgantown, which ensures that customers are supporting local small family farms.

The South Morgantown Community Farmers' Market is also open for business.

This market is located at Community United Methodist Church on U.S. 119 (across from the Clinton Fire Hall) and is open from 4-7 p.m. every Thursday. Customers can purchase a variety of locally grown and made items. According to their website (smcfarmersmarket.org), the mission of the South Morgantown Community Farmers Market is to offer fresh and affordable products of agricultural integrity and to provide a place for local farmers to sell these products directly to the local community.

According to the American Dietetic Association (ADA), more Americans than ever — 28 percent — are adjusting their eating habits to achieve healthier lifestyles.

The ADA national public opinion survey, Nutrition and You: Trends 2000, reported 84 percent of those polled said diet and nutrition are personally important to them.

Remember to encourage your children or grandchildren to eat healthy snacks during summer break.

Provide them with the opportunity to grab a banana, trail mix, or an apple, rather than the unhealthy alternatives. I encourage you to stop-by the Morgantown or South Morgantown farmers markets to buy locally grown and fresh foods for your families.

I will be providing children's activities on June 26 at the Morgantown Farmers Market, which would provide the perfect opportunity to learn more about the 4-H program, and the WVU Extension Service, and to purchase fruits and vegetables during National Fruit and Vegetable Month.

For information about fruits and vegetables, area farmers markets, or 4-H and positive youth development, contact me at the Monongalia County Office of the WVU Extension Service at 304-291-7201 or e-mail me at Becca.Fint-Clark@mail.wvu.edu.

Thin fruit trees by leaving one fruit approximately every 6- to 12-inches along the branches or one fruit per cluster.

The higher the leaf-to-fruit ratio, the sweeter the fruit.

A standard apple tree should have about 40 leaves for each fruit.

Dwarf apples, which usually produce a ratio of 1 fruit to about 25 leaves, will yield better-quality fruit when thinned.

Keep summer cookouts safe and enjoyable with these tips

ALMOST AS much as I hate to mow the lawn, I love to barbecue!

I have procured an adequate supply of propane for my gas grill; one never wants to run out of gas before the burgers are done.

Though my grill is aging, my appeals for a replacement have not yet been approved by the "Mrs."

A year or so ago, Dr. Florita Montgomery, WVU Extension specialist, communications, sent out some great tips and ideas to help keep our summer cookouts safe and enjoyable.

Summer promises secret recipes for outdoor grilling and all-day picnics.

Summer also threatens a few food dangers.

Even when you are only shopping for food and getting ready to grill, your summer plans could leave you and your guests open to foodborne illnesses.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture reminds you that summer brings its own requirements for safe food handling.

The USDA provides these cautions:

■ When shopping, buy cold food like meat and poultry last, right before checkout. Separate raw meat and poultry from other food in your shopping cart to guard against cross-contamination. This can happen when raw meat or poultry juices drip on other food. Put packages of raw meat and poultry into plastic bags.

Plan to drive directly home from the grocery store. Consider using a cooler with ice for perishable food. Always refrigerate perishable food within two hours. Refrigerate within one hour when the outdoor temperature is above 90 degrees.

■ Marinate food in the refrigerator, not on the counter. Poultry and cubed meat or stew meat can be marinated up to two days. Beef, veal, pork and lamb roasts, chops and steaks may be marinated up to five days. If some of the marinade is to be used as a sauce on the cooked food, reserve a portion of the marinade before putting raw meat and poultry in it. If the marinade used on raw meat or poultry is to be reused, let it come to a boil first to destroy any harmful bacteria.

■ Separate raw and cooked food — To prevent foodborne illness, don't use the same platter and utensils for raw and cooked meat and poultry. Harmful bacteria present in raw meat and poultry, and their juices can contaminate safely cooked food. Be sure that everyone helping you has plenty of clean utensils and platters.

■ Keep hands and surfaces clean — Wash your hands with warm, soapy water for 20 seconds before and after handling food. Wash your cutting boards, dishes and other utensils with hot, soapy water after preparing each food item. Wash fruits and vegetables with cold water before using them. There is no need to wash or rinse meat or poultry for cooking it.

For more information about nutrition, food safety and meal planning, contact your local county Extension Office.

Farmers may still enroll in the West Virginia Conservation Reserve Enhancement Program (CREP) to protect water quality and wildlife habitat.

Applications may be made continuously, with no set deadline.

The CREP offers rental payments to farmers who voluntarily convert highly erodible cropland and other environmentally sensitive acreage to vegetative cover, such as riparian buffers, filter strips and wetlands.

The following conservation practices may be eligible for land enrolled in a CREP contract: Establishment of Permanent Introduced Grasses and Legumes, Establishment of Permanent Native Grasses, Hardwood Tree Planting, Filter Strips, Riparian Buffers, or Wetland Restoration.

For a complete list of eligibility requirements and benefits, contact Eric McCartney at the USDA Service Center in Kingwood at 304-329-1923 or your local USDA Service Center.

Garden tips

Encourage young fruit trees to develop strong limbs and a wider crotch angle by weighing down the branches with clothespins.

Thin fruit trees by leaving one fruit approximately every 6- to 12-inches along the branches or one fruit per cluster.

The higher the leaf-to-fruit ratio, the sweeter the fruit.

A standard apple tree should have about 40 leaves for each fruit.

Faculty, students earn NASA funds

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Seventeen engineering faculty members and students at WVU have received a total of $188,000 in grants and fellowships from the NASA West Virginia Space Grant Consortium to help propel their research to new heights.

The funding will support research in a wide variety of areas, from sensor fusion and wind turbines to bacterial infections.

The fellowships are awarded competitively to undergraduate students in STEM (science, technology, engineering and math) disciplines who participate in research during the academic year or in the summer. Receiving these awards this year are engineering majors Derrick Banerjee, Matthew Boots, Adly Noore and Byron Patterson.

Graduate Student Research Fellowships are awarded on a one-year basis to graduate students as well as to students who have been admitted to a graduate program in a STEM discipline.

Matthew Williamson and Christina Yarborough.

WVU engineering faculty members Yu Gu and Ashish Nimbarte received Research Initiation Grants, which provide initial support to beginning faculty researchers, helping them to establish a long-term relationship with NASA.

Faculty members James Smith and Kevin Chang received a grant through the Consortium's Joint University-Industry Research Program, which fosters and cultivates collaborative research between researchers at member institutions and aerospace-related and other high-tech companies in West Virginia.

Faculty members Xian-An Cao, Yu Gu, Brad Seanor and Srikanth Gururajan received ASA EPSCoR Seed Grants.

The program supports faculty at all West Virginia colleges and universities.

Its aim is to initiate research activities, conduct pilot experiments or demonstrate new concepts that might lead to significant projects in the future.

Established in 1991, the NASA West Virginia Space Grant Consortium is headquartered in the WVU College of Engineering and Mineral Resources and includes all colleges and universities around the state.

The Consortium's mission is to develop a statewide infrastructure that will enhance the state's competitiveness in research, education and industry.

For more information about the Consortium and its programs, contact Candy Cordwell at Corwell@nasa.wvu.edu.

WVU recognized for Information Assurance Research

Submitted to The Dominion Post

WVU researchers have received recognition from the federal government for their efforts to keep our nation's information systems safe from cyber terrorism and other threats in the digital age.

WVU has been named a National Center of Academic Excellence in Information Assurance Research, a designation made jointly by the National Security Agency and the Department of Homeland Security.

"We appreciate this recognition of our work," said Brian Woerner, chair of the WVU Lane Department of Computer Science and Electrical Engineering. "But we are equally excited about the opportunities for partnerships and collaboration that this provides to our faculty and students."

The goal of the Center of Academic Excellence programs is to reduce vulnerability in our national information infrastructure by promoting research in information assurance and to produce a growing number of professionals with information assurance expertise, Woerner said.

The designation is valid for five academic years, after which the school must reapply.

Students attending designated schools are eligible for scholarships and grants through the Department of Defense Information Assurance Scholarship Program and the Federal Cyber Service Scholarship for Service Program. The new designation also will allow WVU faculty to compete for specialized research projects addressing critical security needs of our information infrastructure.

Woerner will attend a ceremony recognizing WVU's achievement on June 8 in Washington D.C., along with Roy Nutter, another faculty member in the department.

The Lane Department offers undergraduate degrees in computer science, computer engineering, electrical engineering and biometric systems; graduate degrees in computer science, software engineering, computer engineering and electrical engineering; and graduate certificates in software engineering, computer forensics, and biometrics and information assurance.

Professors receive pulsar grant

Submitted to The Dominion Post

What makes a regular star into a super star? Hint: it's not a stint on American Idol. It is a process that causes regular, slowly spinning neutron stars to become a kind of rapidly rotating, super dense star called a pulsar.

Duncan Lorimer and Maura McLaughlin, assistant professors in the Department of Physics at West Virginia University, have won a $46,089 grant from the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory to study a missing link of creation in the lives of millisecond pulsars, the fastest spinning stars in space.

"As far as astronomical objects go, pulsars are the next most exotic things out there after black holes," Lorimer said. "They are great fun to study and one of the things we like to do is to piece together how they live their lives."

Lorimer and McLaughlin are part of an international research team that has been studying a pulsar that is undergoing a recycling process thought to be the missing link that explains how these stars come to spin so quickly. This star system is called J1023.

These neutron stars have about the same mass as the sun, and yet they are only the size of an average city. Due to their great density, they have very large magnetic fields and can spin at a rate of hundreds of times per second.

Scientists believe that an adjacent star dumps material into these pulsar stars, and this material becomes a flat disk around them. The disk of rotating material then causes the star to spin faster and faster until the stream of material stops.

During this process, X-rays are produced from the intense heat that is generated. These star systems are referred to as X-ray binary systems.

Recent evidence from J1023 has proved that it was previously a part of one of these X-ray binary systems, giving further evidence that these systems are the potential transitional link that turns a star into a pulsar.

During their research, the physicists will study the expected X-ray emissions from J1023.

"We will observe the system for five complete orbits and look for evidence of X-ray variability that will allow us to better understand the energetics of this environment," Lorimer said.

Aging institute honors Boggs

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Ethel Mae Boggs, an adult services social worker for more than 28 years, has been named the recipient of the Anita S. Harbert Outstanding Achievement in Aging Award.

The award will be presented during the WVU Division of Social Work's Summer Institute on Aging, at 11:45 a.m. Wednesday at the Lakeview Resort & Conference Center in Morgantown. Boggs began her employment with the West Virginia Department of Health and Human Services on May 17, 1974, in Child Protective Services and has worked in WVDHHR's Adult Services section since January 1982.

"Ethel Mae Boggs is a shining example of a social worker who works day in and day out to protect and advocate for some of our most vulnerable citizens in West Virginia, the abused and neglected elderly," said Susie Layne, a WVDHHR senior program specialist who nominated Boggs.

Boggs has a degree in social service technology from Glenville State College.

In January of 1982 she began working in adult services. At that time she worked primarily with the chore program. She took and processed the applications, completed determination for eligibility and arranged training for chore service providers.

She moved up the ranks and in July 1984 worked with adult family care services, chore services, health related services and information and referral. In June 1998, she was promoted to adult protective service worker.

She is the sole APS worker for Braxton and Clay counties. She investigates all the adult abuse and neglect referrals in those counties. She also provides ongoing services to active APS cases. She has had a record of perfect attendance for many years.

Boggs said she relishes her role as a social service provider to the elderly. "Many people are lonely and have very few friends or family to assist them," she said. "They often live in isolated areas and their needs are not being met simply because they are not aware of available services."

"Helping to get these folks linked with services or medical attention if needed is something that gives pleasure to me."

WVU's Honors Leadership Academy shows students the culture of learning

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Each fall at WVU, there will be those freshmen who stand out: She'll persuade with tact. He'll build a consensus.

They'll start fledgling groups on campus.

They got to the university a little earlier than their cohorts to poke around the campus, ask that tenuous first question of professors and build a successful college career out of their enthusiasm and WVU's guidance.

They are Honors Leadership Academy graduates.

The academy is three summer weeks with five hours of classroom time a day.

Yet, during what seems like a short time, the students are challenged on how they present themselves in class, their views of the world and the way they view themselves.

Chris Smith, a native of St. Albans, sees himself becoming a law student and then a sports agent. The WVU junior said that without the program, he doesn't think he would see himself as a leader.

"I don't think that I would have been as inspired to get involved with my peers to try and make a change because HLA at its core showed me that everybody has the potential to be a leader, and everybody has the potential to change something they love," Smith said.

The course propelled Smith into the Leadership Studies department at WVU and led him to co-found a group that coaches students in impromptu speaking, the Mountaineer Association for Public Speaking.

Before HLA, he had thought leadership was something for politicians only, but by learning more about his leadership style, he had the confidence to lead others.

Smith said the program shows that WVU has faith in the state as a whole and the students it is training.

"I like it when people have faith in me," he said.

Lauren Snyder, a Boone County resident who just finished her freshman year, is a chemistry major and plans to become a doctor.

In her first year at WVU, she has been an active advocate for the program that helped her to enter class discussions with confidence and professionalism.

"I've actually started recruiting honors kids that I know from high school that are going to be coming up here living in this dorm" at the Honors College, she said. "I already have a good friend coming to HLA because of me."

During the academy, she said, she became a more solid writer, changed her views on poverty through class discussion and learned to exercise patience when classroom discussions didn't go her way.

"I feel like the class molded me into a better person," she said.

She's active in her sorority, Kappa Kappa Gamma, and is putting what she learned about leadership at the academy to use.

"It really helped me when we're working on charities and we're working on group activities to take others' perspective into account and not necessarily do just what I want to do or do what one person wants to do," she said. "It helped me to form a general consensus of all of the ideas and push them into one solid foundation for a project."

Lisa DeFrank-Cole, who founded the program two years ago, said she wanted to introduce freshman honors students to leadership early so they can start college with a firm footing and have a positive impact on the campus.

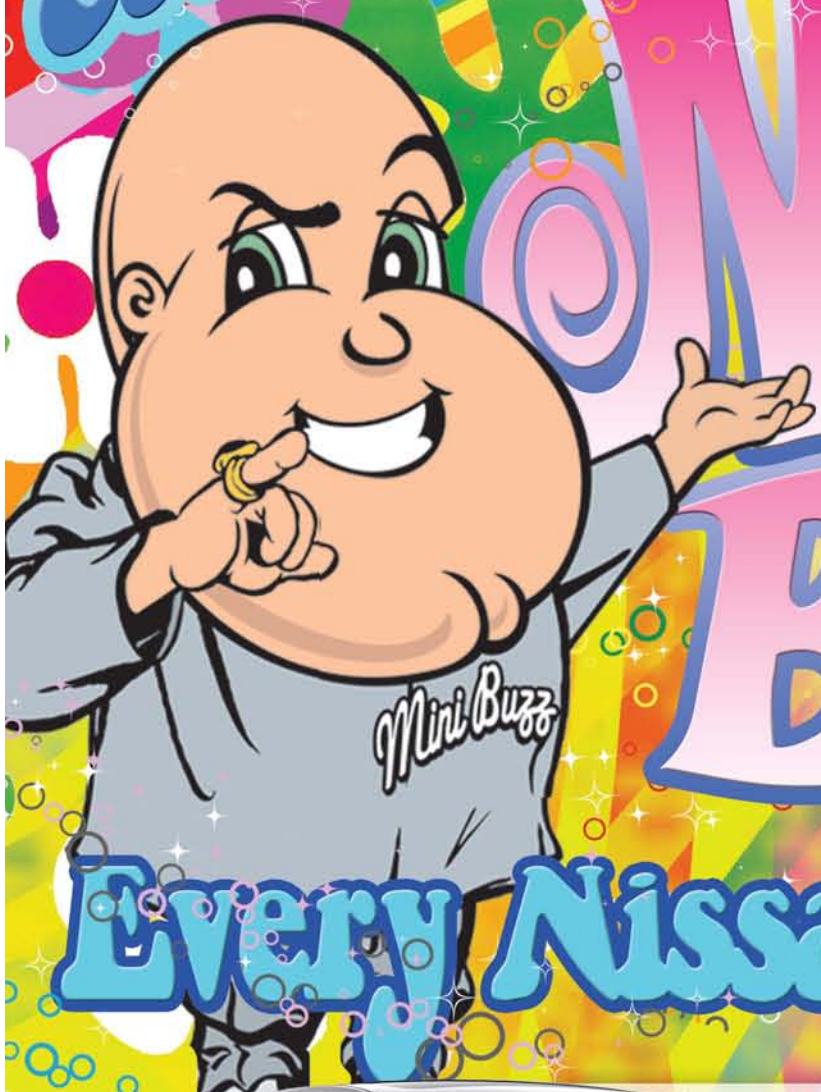

DeFrank-Cole said it's exciting to see how the HLA graduates are already applying their lessons when they return to campus for the official start of the year.

"They're already thinking about what organization they can join and run, and if there's not something here that they want to be a part of, that they could start something on their own," she said.

"There's no way to know where they're going to go in the future, and what they're going to end up doing," she said, but "the idea that the sky is the limit is something that they get by coming, and there's less fear about the future."

best of... ARTIST MOVIES BY JACQUELINE CUTLER

"Frida" (2002) Salma Hayek had hair affixed to create a unibrow while portraying the fascinating surrealist Frida Kahlo. The movie covers her marriage to artist Diego Rivera (Alfred Molina). She also took Leon Trotsky as a lover, which fits, considering Kahlo even fudged her age to make herself born during a communist uprising. The movie reveals Kahlo's full life as a sexual, artistic and political revolutionary. "At the end of the day, we can endure much more than we think," she says.

"Pollock" (2000) Ed Harris, who also directs, practically vibrates off the screen, he's so intense as the abstract expressionist. And Marcia Gay Harden, who plays wife Lee Krasner, won an Oscar for her amazing performance. The film does an excellent job of showing how raw Jackson Pollock's life was and how people just didn't get his art. When an interviewer asks, "How do you know when you're finished with a painting?" he replies, "How do you know when you're finished making love?"

Ending on a 'Glee'-ful note

Finally, it's the regionals competition – and for the glee club of William McKinley High School of Lima, Ohio, it is so “on”!

The freshman year of Fox's Golden Globe Award-winning musical-comedy-drama phenomenon “Glee” has been driving toward the very vocal showdown that fuels the hit series' first-season finale Tuesday, June 8. Past guest stars Josh Groban and Olivia Newton-John return as two of the contest's judges.

It's been quite a road to the finals for faculty adviser Will “Mr. Schue” Schuester (Matthew Morrison) and New Directions, his not-always-merry band of music makers ... marked by everything from the Romeo-and-Juliet romance of ambitious Rachel Berry (Lea Michele) and Vocal Adrenaline singing rival Jesse St. James (Jonathan Groff, previously Michele's Broadway co-star in “Spring Awakening”) to an ever-present nemesis in take-no-prisoners gym coach Sue Sylvester (Jane Lynch), who is scarily enough the third regionals judge.

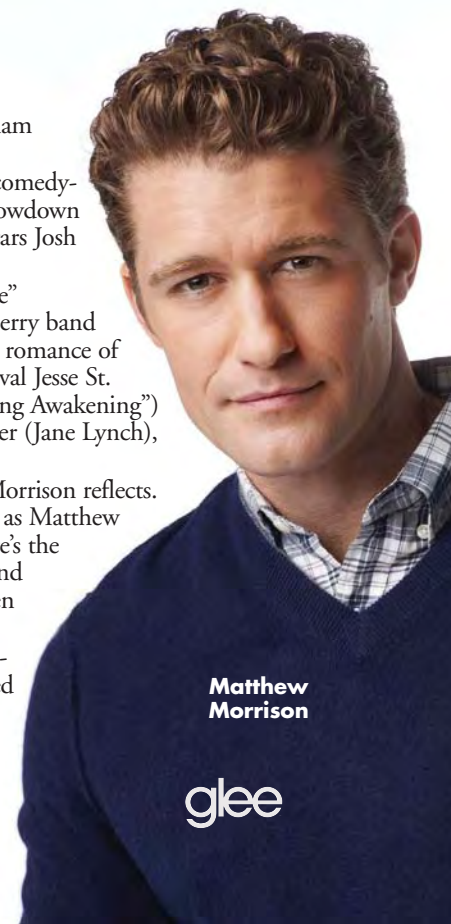

“It's such a cliché to say this, but we really have become a family,” Morrison reflects. “I love these kids so much, and as both a teacher on the show and me as Matthew Morrison, it's been so awesome to see the journey they have had. There's the growth they've had on the show, but also their real growth as singers and dancers and actors. The finale is a culmination of everything we've been working so hard to build.

“(Filming it) was sad, but at the same time, there was a feeling of ‘senioritis,’” adds “Hairspray” Broadway veteran Morrison. “We'd worked so hard, and the end was so close, we were all looking forward to the break.”

It wasn't a break yet for the younger cast members, though, since they then had a four-city “Glee” concert tour. “I had to be careful about expressing my excitement,” Morrison admits. “I didn't want to rub it in their faces that their work wasn't done yet.”

Dangerous Donovan
key to U.S. hopes in World Cup

If the United States wants to better its group-stage elimination in the 2006 World Cup, then its play as a group better be of world-class quality.

That means finding that sometimes elusive balance between being responsible defensively and attacking effectively. Once the ball is won back by the defenders, countering with precision will spring the forwards, and that's where you'll see Landon Donovan go to work.

There's no one better on the U.S. side at creating offense than the veteran Donovan, who in his third World Cup appearance leads the national team against England to open the 2010 Cup in South Africa. The game airs Saturday, June 12, on ABC, which teams with ESPN and ESPN2 to televise live all 64 matches of the tournament.

Donovan is a three-time champion in Major League Soccer, the captain of the Los Angeles Galaxy and the league's MVP in 2009, but his legacy has been built on the international stage. He began this year as the Americans' all-time leader in goals and assists (42 each), and he set a single-year record with 10 assists in 2009. Also, two years ago he became the fastest player in U.S. history caps (appearances), and the fourth fastest ever to reach 100 for his country.

'Diva'-licious dramedy is back

BY JOHN CROOK

Brooke Elliott

The last time we saw attorney Jane Bingum (Brooke Elliott), her world was turning upside down.

Jane, whose plus-size body currently is being occupied by the spirit of a deceased and vapid model named Deb, was facing possible disbarment for breaching attorney-client confidentiality to prevent an act of fraud. The good news was that romantic sparks were starting to fly with Tony Nicastro (guest star David Denman), the handsome attorney representing her. Matters took a surreal turn when yet another hottie, a guy named Ethan (guest star Devon Gummersall), showed up on her doorstep claiming to be Jane's "secret" husband.

Fortunately, in the middle of all this, Jane can still count on her borderline inept guardian angel, Fred (Ben Feldman), along with three humans who have her back: Grayson Kent (Jackson Hurst), Deb's former fiance, who now works with Jane at the law office and feels himself oddly attracted to the woman he doesn't realize is his ex-love in a new body; ditsy Stacy Barrett (April Bowlby, "Two and a Half Men"), Deb's best friend and now Jane's supportive roommate; and Teri Lee (Margaret Cho), Jane's loyal assistant.

Part fantasy, part legal dramedy and part female empowerment message, "Drop Dead Diva" – which returns for a new season Sunday, June 6, on Lifetime – was one of last season's brightest success stories, that rare show that opened big, buoyed by strong ratings and even stronger word of mouth, and got even bigger as more and more viewers discovered the show.

Maybe that's why, on a recent April morning, there are no divas anywhere in sight on the humming Peachtree City, Ga., soundstage that is home to the show. Elliott – the pretty stage-trained actress making her TV series debut in the title role – takes advantage of a break in filming to sit down for a few minutes in one of the richly appointed "offices" that make up the set.

"In season two, just when Jane thinks she has a handle on things, she doesn't," Elliott reveals. "She keeps being presented with challenge after challenge, and whenever she is going, 'I know how to do this; I'm a lawyer,' she is thrown all these things that make her realize she doesn't 'have' everything the way she thinks she does."

Elliott herself, however, seems to be coping with her newfound stardom just fine, although she admits it's still disconcerting when strangers come up to her because they recognize her from the show.

"A lot of people have been very nice and said how much they like the show," she says. "You have to get used to the fact that you are not completely anonymous. It's both startling and good. You forget, if you happen to be wearing no makeup and some jogging pants and head to the store, and people recognize you and want to talk to you about what you are buying. But it's also really great when people just want to tell you how much they really like your show. Who can not love that?"

"The Wizarding World of Harry Potter,"
www.universalorlando.com/harry-potter/
 It's a little confusing — Warner Bros. produces the movies based on the "Harry Potter" novels, but on Sunday, NBC (part of NBC Universal) is airing "The Making of the Wizarding World of Harry Potter," a new theme-park attraction at its corporate sibling, Universal Orlando Resort in

"Pretty Little Liars," www.prettilylitiars.com
 Is this story about privileged high-school girls in the exclusive town of Rosewood, Pa., a book series or a TV series? In the case of this ABC Family show, premiering Tuesday, the answer is "yes." The official home page offers the "PLL" books, T-shirts and more. You can also follow the author on Twitter and send a note from the show's mysterious "A."

ALL MY CHILDREN Jesse went to rescue Madison from the smoky hotel room while Brot had Iraq flashbacks and froze up. Colby asked Tad to help her convince Liza that Damon was a good guy. Jack continued to look for Erica and asked Doc Waller to help. Greenlee interrupted their meeting to tell him the SEC was coming to check the books and someone needed to be there to defend Erica.

AS THE WORLD TURNS At a party at Lily's, Noah saw Luke and Reid kissing, then came face to face with Luke for the first time since the accident. Luke flashed back to his first kiss with Noah. Silas took Molly captive at the abandoned Old Mill and tried to rape her. Holden arrived, the two men scuffled, and Molly shot Silas dead.

THE BOLD AND THE BEAUTIFUL Pam tried to break it off with Stephen, but he refused and persuaded her to let him stay at her home. Pam told Stephanie she had a new man but wouldn't give his name. Oliver told Steffy he loved Hope and arranged for Daddy Yankee to perform at her graduation party.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES Bo and Hope found Ciara's treasure box, but she'd taken the mugging victims' wallets out. Carly gave Chloe an ultimatum: Tell Daniel about the affair, or she would. At the GENERAL HOSPITAL Carly told Sonny he should do whatever was necessary to free Michael. Dante enjoyed Brook's cooking and reminisced with her about the past. After dinner, he and Lulu made love. Sonny went to therapy with Kristina, who realized she was attracted to Kiefer – and let him abuse her – because he reminded her of her father. Sonny balked and ended the session early.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE Markko was arrested for the attempted murder of Ford and put in the cell next to Cole's. Todd suspected Hannah was the one who tried to kill Ford and had her followed. Bo and Nora's wedding day is one disaster after another – she suffers several injuries, her hair turns green, her dress catches fire, and a skunk stinks up the church and sprays Bo. As he and Rex tried to repair the damage, they got a surprise visit from David Vickers.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS Emily was arrested by the DEA, and her license was suspended. Michael told her and Jack that people all over the country had been getting drugs supposedly prescribed by Emily, and they realized it had to be Patty. Chloe and J.T. demanded to know how Billy and Victoria ended up married.

Kelly Bensimon from 'The Real Housewives of New York City'

We're sorry, but unless you share her assets, you can't look like Kelly Bensimon of Bravo's Thursday reality series "The Real Housewives of New York City." We can, though, steer you where to shop to approximate the look.

Any woman who poses for Playboy, has spent much of her life modeling, and runs around in heels and miniskirts is very different from the rest of us who, well, don't.

Talking from her Manhattan home, while preparing for her daughter's sleepover to celebrate her 12th birthday, Bensimon describes her style as "athletic, playful, but very trend-driven."

For a signature look, she says, a woman must "either pick breasts or legs, and I always choose legs. Something really short until you can't do short anymore. It's really about your skin. Once your skin starts to go, you can't wear short clothes."

She acknowledges that clothes hang well on her. "I have a frame that fits clothes, and I try to have fun with different trends," Bensimon says. "I don't necessarily always speak to the trends. Whenever you see pictures of me, I like to wear a lot of dresses. It's nice to see women in dresses, and I like to see women in jeans."

The trends she likes now are pretty dresses paired with army jackets. "What separates me from a lot of people on television is I really, really mix it up," she says.

She wears clothes from H&M, Alice & Olivia, Derek Lam and Ralph Lauren.

Bensimon enjoys shopping at Calypso, Intermix, Bergdorf Goodman, Barneys and Saks.

"I like clothes that remind me of something," she says. "It reminds me of my mother or a certain icon. Each pair of jeans you buy has a story. That rip came from a taxi, that rip came from gardening with my kids."

Her favorite jeans are Rogan. "He has a great, sexy sensibility for women," she says.

She also wears denim from AG, Ralph Lauren and authentic 501s.

Bensimon's clothes represent specific times. "It's not just wearing clothes; it's creating a moment," she says.

And she almost always wears heels, favoring Manolo Blahnik shoes.

"They are really, really incredible," she says. "I dress intentionally for the show. I want people to be inspired."

Reeling off different outfits, Bensimon says, "The white dress is inspired by a Raquel Welch kind of feeling. The orange shorts and black sweater are a brunette, country club look."

Her main advice to those looking for a little panache is: "Be inspired. (Say) 'I will buy this.' The '80s are fun. A hot pink tank top (to) wear with white pants and a blazer. It's called swimming in and out of the trends."

Just not drowning in them.

Lauren German of 'Happy Town' on ABC

By Jacqueline Cutler

Q: What was life like on the set?

A: Shooting with this cast was so much fun. Francis Conroy, Sam Neill, Amy Acker, Steven Weber, were all in Toronto shooting.

Q: How do you describe your character, Henley?

A: Henley is sort of this Gypsy-type girl who is mysterious. She's very tight-lipped about her past and her plans, and she comes into this town with her own private sort of mission, but the audience is not really told what she is doing in Haplin. She tells everybody, "My mom really loved this town. And my mom passed away." It's really such a small thing she offers as an excuse.

Q: You've been known to do your own stunts. Do you do any here?

A: The show is pretty mild in the stunt department. We had a really long jogging scene and went over a big field, maybe more considered the woods, and I was jumping over snow. I love doing stuff like that. I grew up dancing, primarily ballet and jazz. Middle school and high school were my most intense years, five to six days a week. My knees are going downhill, I can feel a little tightness.

Q: Should we be afraid of Sam Neill?

A: Only in real life. I cannot sing Samuel's praises enough, and I have most of my scenes with Sam. He is so good at playing Merritt Grieves, and he did sort of put on this very traditional '40s vibe.

Michael Nouri

If an actor goes back to weekday television, being the new man in Erica Kane's life is a good way to do it.

Long a staple of prime-time shows – including “Damages” and “NCIS” lately – Michael Nouri is working mainly opposite daytime legend Susan Lucci in his recently started stint on ABC's “All My Children.” He's playing Caleb McGraw, a mountain recluse who isn't entirely helpful to Erica in the aftermath of her plane crash, since it demolished his home.

“The bottom line is that I really love working,” Nouri explains, “and I'm very excited about this character, who's very unusual for a soap. The first time I did a soap was in 1975; that was ‘Search for Tomorrow,’ and Kevin Kline was on the show with me. I did that for maybe a year and a half, then I didn't do another soap until ‘The Young and the Restless’ several years ago.

“I have great respect for the people who do daytime television,” Nouri adds. “Back in the days when I did ‘Search,’ we had teleprompters (displays showing dialogue or other instructions) ... which never worked for me. I found them to be very distracting.

“Now actors have to learn pages and pages of dialogue, and I'm not used to that. We'll see how that goes for me. Susan (Lucci) is going to be my teacher.”

Also famous for starring opposite Jennifer Beals in the iconic 1983 movie “Flashdance,” Nouri maintains he's “not a stranger to characters with rough edges, and I really love playing those. I like characters who are far away from my reality, and I'm really interested in why this guy (Caleb) is living off the grid.”

My Favorites:

Movie: “‘It's a Wonderful Life’ comes to mind, and so does ‘Zorba the Greek.’”

Television program you're not in: “At the moment, I think ‘Justified.’”

Singer: “James Taylor. He's become a friend over the years. My daughter who lives in Auckland, New Zealand, went to see him in concert recently and went backstage and met him for the first time ... and she just fell in love. He's a wonderful man.”

Birthplace: Washington, D.C.

Current residence: Los Angeles

Marital status: Divorced, has two daughters

Other television credits include: “Army Wives,” “Brothers & Sisters,” “Law & Order: Criminal Intent,” “The O.C.,” “Touched by an Angel,” “61,” “Victor/Victoria” (telecast of the stage version), “Changes,” “Quiet Victory: The Charlie Wedemeyer Story,” “Downtown,” “Rage of Angels: The Story Continues,” “Bay City Blues,” “Secrets of a Mother and Daughter,” “The Gangster Chronicles,” “The Last Convertible,” “The Curse of Dracula,” “Somerset”

Other movie credits include: “The Proposal,” “Invincible,” “The Terminal”

whattheywatch

Miranda Lambert

“I record ‘Law & Order: Special Victims Unit’ and ‘The Golden Girls.’ We watch ‘The Golden Girls’ religiously; that's Blake's (Shelton, Lambert's boyfriend) favorite show in the world. I bought him the DVD sets, too. And I've seen pretty much every ‘Law & Order: Special Victims Unit’ episode there is to see.”

Pauley Perrette

“Clearly, I am the biggest ‘NCIS’ fan in the world. And you know what my other obsession is for 20 years: ‘America's Most Wanted.’ Also, I'm a ‘Survivor’ fanatic. I went into ‘Heroes and Villains’ not thinking I'd like it, but it's been such a ride. And I watch ‘Big Brother,’ and I've never missed ‘60 Minutes,’ ever.”

Michael Nouri

“I record ‘Justified,’ ‘Breaking Bad,’ ‘American Idol’ and ... oh, that show that starts with a ‘D’ that stars Glenn Close (‘Damages,’ on which Nouri played Close's husband). And I also go to Turner Classic Movies and record a lot of the classics, like (director) Akira Kurosawa's movies.”

Laura Bell Bundy

“I record ‘The Amazing Race,’ ‘Mad Men’ and ‘Modern Family.’ And ‘Battlestar Galactica,’ but it's ‘Caprica’ now. And during presidential campaigns, I record all the shows like ‘The Daily Show With Jon Stewart’ and ‘The Rachel Maddow Show.’ And ‘Fringe’ – I just love ‘Fringe.’ I want them to put me on the show.”

Lie to Me
8 p.m. on 43 53

Fans of this underrated drama starring Tim Roth as human lie detector Dr. Cal Lightman have had to put up with some frustrating programming moves by the network, but Fox isn't lying to you this time: The show is back with a batch of new episodes, and — huzzah! — it's even been picked up for another season. Kelli Williams and Brendan Hines also star.

2010 Hip Hop Honors
9 p.m. on VH1

The seventh annual Hip Hop Honors go south, geographically speaking, paying tribute to some of the region's biggest names, such as Jermaine Dupri, J Prince of Rap-A-Lot Records, Luther Campbell and 2 Live Crew, Master P, and Organized Noize.

The Big Bang Theory
9:31 p.m. on 2 5 7

Things would go so much more smoothly if everyone would simply remember four little words: It's all about Sheldon (Jim Parsons), who finds himself forced to make peace when Leonard and Penny (Johnny Galecki, Kaley Cuoco) get into an argument, a situation that inconveniently disturbs Sheldon's routine in "The Guitarist Amplification." Kevin Sussman guest stars.

Persons Unknown
10 p.m. on 9 11 12

Oscar-winning writer Christopher McQuarrie ("The Usual Suspects") is among the executive producers of this new mystery drama about a group of strangers who must work together to solve the puzzle of their lives after they are taken from their daily lives and dropped in a deserted town with no recollection of how they got there — or why. The ensemble cast includes Alan Ruck, Daisy Betts, Jason Wiles, Sean O'Bryan and Tina Holmes.

tonight's PICKS

100 Questions

8:30 p.m. on 9 11 12

Charlotte (Sophie Winkleman) tries to attract the attention of a guy she's interested in. Mike (Christopher Moynihan) continues his attempts to scare Leslie (Smith Cho). Jill (Collette Wolfe) asks a reluctant Wayne (David Walton) to speak to her class for Career Day. Michael Benjamin Washington also stars in the new episode "Are You Romantic?"

Burn Notice

9 p.m. on (USA)

Michael (Jeffrey Donovan) meets Jesse, a recently burned counterintelligence agent looking for his assistance. Michael agrees to help Jesse clear his name, but first he must get him out of the crosshairs of a ruthless drug trafficker seeking revenge in the new episode "Fast Friends." Bruce Campbell, Sharon Gless and Gabrielle Anwar also star.

The Mentalist

10 p.m. on 2 5 7

Patrick (Simon Baker) insists on helping Cho (Tim Kang) conduct an unofficial investigation when a member of his former gang, the Avon Park Playboys, is found murdered in "Blood In, Blood Out."

The Dominion Post:

offering news,
money-saving coupons, sports and much more.

THE DOMINION
Post

House
9 p.m. on 43 53

House's (Hugh Laurie) best friend, Dr. James Wilson (Robert Sean Leonard), is the focus of this episode, in which a friend and former patient (Joshua Malina) develops a mysterious illness while the two men are on a hunting trip celebrating another year of his remission from cancer. Wilson has some tough decisions to make, and House isn't happy about his ultimate choice. Lisa Edelstein also stars in "Wilson."

The Memory Keeper's Daughter
9 p.m. on (LIFE)

If this 2008 drama doesn't touch your heart, consult a cardiologist to find out if you have one. Based on a best-selling novel by Kim Edwards, it tells the tale of a doctor (Dermot Mulroney) who delivers his own twins, one of whom has Down syndrome. He gives the little girl to a nurse (Emily Watson) to be institutionalized and tells his wife (Gretchen Mol) the baby died. But the nurse decides to raise the child as her own. Drama? Oh, yeah.

Pretty Woman
9 p.m. on (WTBS)

Attention, potential future hookers of America. This movie is fiction; these things do not happen in real life. Julia Roberts became a certifiable superstar with this 1990 comedy-drama about a prostitute with a heart of gold whose strictly business relationship with a corporate takeover artist (Richard Gere) becomes something more.

Miami Medical
10 p.m. on 2 5 7

Toy Story 2 8:35 p.m. on (DISN)

Spaceman Buzz Lightyear, cowboy Woody and their cronies are back in this computer-animated 1999 sequel, which many critics consider stronger in the story department than the first movie. A toy collector (voice of Wayne Knight) makes off with Woody (voice of Tom Hanks), prompting Buzz (voice of Tim Allen) and others to mount a rescue mission. Kelsey Grammer, Joan Cusack, John Ratzenberger ("Cheers") and Jim Varney also provide voice talent.

Law & Order 9 p.m. on (9) (11) (12)

Robert Klein: Unfair and Unbalanced 10 p.m. on (HBO)

In 1975, Robert Klein made HBO history by starring in the network's first-ever original comedy special. Now the comedian and actor returns for his ninth standup special, recorded at the Amature Theatre of the Broward Center for the Performing Arts in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Expect the caustic comic to offer insights into society's foibles and follies, plus several musical interludes in which Klein is backed by a symphony orchestra.

Flower Drum Song 10:30 p.m. on (TCM)

A nearly all-Asian cast shines in this colorful 1961 adaptation of Rodgers & Hammerstein's 1958 hit Broadway musical set in San Francisco's Chinatown, where a young woman (Miyoshi Umeki, re-creating her stage role) arrives with her father to enter into an arranged marriage with a nightclub owner (Jack Soo, "Barney Miller").
