Drilling into mine set

FODC to study pool chemistry

BY DAVID BEARD

The Dominion Post

Friends of Deckers Creek (FODC) is preparing to take a small step in its Richard Mine acid mine drainage cleanup project.

The first of a series of bore holes will be drilled into the mine so the chemistry of the Project Manager Tim Denicola Richard Mine pool can be studied and the best site for a treat-told members of its restoration team that a contractor is slated to drill the hole July 31. The access will enable a geotechnical study.

Denicola said its contractor, GAI Consultants, secured Uniontown, Pa.-based driller Redstone International to install and monitor the exploratory well. The bore hole will be 4 inches across. FODC previously secured an agreement with a Brookhaven landowner for the well site.

As previously reported, this project will cost about $30,000.

project, Alexander said. It's laborious fitting all the puzzle pieces together, but it's a labor of love, the longtime board member said.

HIV diagnosis rate fell in U.S. over decade

NEW YORK — The rate of HIV infections diagnosed in the United States each year fell by one-third during the past decade, a government study finds. Experts celebrated it as hopeful news that the AIDS epidemic may be slowing in the U.S.

The reasons for the drop aren't clear. It might mean fewer new infections are occurring. Or that most infected people already have been diagnosed so more testing won't necessarily find many more cases.

"It could be we are approaching something of a 'ceiling effect," " said one study leader, David Holtgrave, of Johns Hopkins University.

The study was released online Saturday by the Journal of the American Medical Association. It is part of the journal's special report on HIV research, issued ahead of the International AIDS Conference that starts today, in Melbourne, Australia.

HIV is the virus that causes AIDS, which destroys the immune system. The World Health Organization estimates 35 million people globally have the virus. In the United States, 1.1 million people are thought to be infected, though many don't know it.

The study is based on HIV diagnoses from all 50 states' health departments, which get test results from doctors' offices, clinics, hospitals and laboratories. The data span a decade, making this a larger and longer look at these trends than any previous study, said another study author, Amy Lansky, of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The findings: 16 out of every 100,000 people ages 13 and older were newly diagnosed with HIV in 2011, a steady decline from 24 out of 100,000 people in 2002.

Program shelters homeless

Hopes to expand, give others chance

BY JIM BISSETT

The Dominion Post

"That's the way things work out sometimes."

You'll hear that above worldweary credo a lot in the homeless community. Chuck Shaffer said it one afternoon this past week, as a matter of fact.

If you had told Shaffer, back when he was working security jobs in his hometown of Dayton, Ohio, that he'd someday find himself without a permanent roof over his head in West Virginia, he would have smiled and told yougently — that you were crazy.

"Well," the 55-year-old said, with another smile, "you really don't know what your circumstances are going to bring." He came to the Mountain State a few years ago for a fresh start with family here. He ended up homeless, sleeping in the woods and under bridges in and around Morgantown because he didn't have anywhere else to go. Shaffer was smiling Thursday because it all came back around. Now, he's a former member of

Associated Press EAST MORICHES, N.Y. -

A pilot who landed his disabled plane on a highway for the second time in eight days said Friday he's lucky to have escaped unhurt and thankful he didn't hit anyone. Frank Fierro, 75, said he was "shaking" as he glided the single-engine Challenger ultralight plane to a landing on the eastbound lanes of Sunrise Highway just before 1 p.m. Fierro landed the same plane in a nearby median on July 10.

Police said Fierro was flying the plane for the first time since the previous week's incident.

Both times it developed engine trouble, forcing Fierro to find a makeshift runway before he could get back to Spadaro Airport in East Moriches.

More than $10,000 in stolen property recovered

BY CONOR GRIFFITH

The Dominion Post

The Marion County Sheriff's Department arrested two Fairmont men this week in connection with a series of break-ins in three counties.

Tracy Joe Leggett, 27, was charged with receiving and transferring property that was stolen from residences in Marion, Taylor and Monongalia counties.

Detective Jeanette Williamson said stolen TVs and tools were found in Leggett's residence when warrant. She said the stolen goods were purchased from Eric Pittman, 42, who was arrested on two counts of delivery of crack cocaine Wednesday.

According to a criminal complaint, Leggett told deputies he bought items from Pittman with the knowledge they were possibly stolen.

Williamson said more than $10,000 in stolen goods recovered after deputies searched three residences.

Deputies conducted con-deputies executed a search trolled drug buys from Pittman. Williamson said Pittman was arrested at his Oakwood Road residence when deputies conducted a search warrant and found more stolen goods.

> She said Pittman broke into residences during the day, when nobody was home and he knew he would have enough time to get away. He is suspected of breaking into three locations in Marion County, three in Taylor County and one in Mon County.

> "He would either find an unlocked door, because peo ple have been leaving doors has not yet been charged in unlocked, or he would simply kick the door in," Williamson explained.

"He would take TVs, tools, computers and even a jar of pennies," she said, adding that Pittman stole and sold the items in order to support his drug habits.

Williamson Pittman was mostly random when picking places to rob but most of them were on Grafton, Halleck, Smithtown and Meadowdale roads.

The break-ins are still being investigated. Pittman connection with the breakins, but more arrests and more charges are pending, Williamson said.

According to Marion County Magistrate Court records, Pittman's bond for the drug-related charges was $20,000. He didn't post and was in the North Central Regional Jail on Saturday. His preliminary hearing was scheduled for Wednesday.

Leggett posted $20,000 bond and was out of jail. He did not have a hearing scheduled as of Friday.

Westover man arrested in Granville

BY TOM TERRAROSA

The Dominion Post

Granville Police arrested a Westover man outside of the Mason Jar Saloon early Saturday, according to a criminal complaint.

Mel Alan Hughes, 31, was charged with assault, disorderly conduct and brandishing a deadly weapon. Magistrate Sandy Holepit said Hughes' bond was set at $10,100. Hughes was listed as an inmate at North Central Regional Jail on Saturday.

According to the complaint, Granville PFC Josh Slagle responded to a call Saturday about a man with a knife outside of the Mason Jar Saloon, on Dents Run Boulevard.

Slagle noticed a black folding knife lying on the ground beside a vehicle that Hughes was attempting to enter.

Witnesses told the police that Hughes was wielding a black folding knife and threatening to cut and stab people, the complaint read.

Statements gathered by police said Hughes was outside of the bar "disturbing the peace of others by acting violently and threatening bar staff" with a knife.

Hughes was arraigned by video from North Central Regional Jail on Saturday. During the arraignment, He admitted to Holepit that he had been drinking prior to his GAI previously recommended to the Natural Resources Conservation Services that 23 such wells be drilled, and FODC would like to drill more in order to get a better picture of the pool. But that would be expensive: 10 wells are estimated at about $200,000.

Armed with information from the study, Denicola said, FODC will begin community outreach to hear feedback and gain support for its project.

The Richard Mine is the single largest source of acid mine drainage into the creek: 200 gallons per minute. That's enough to fill a 22,000-gallon, 16 by 32 foot backyard swimming pool with an 8 foot deep end in 110 minutes, less than two hours. Each year, that contaminated flow puts into the creek 730,500 pounds of acidity, 140,000 pounds of iron, 59,000 pounds of aluminum and 3,200 pounds of manganese, FODC reports.

All that metal, plus the acidity, turns the creek orange and kills the aquatic life for its last 5.3 miles.

On a positive note, the many successful cleanup efforts upstream illustrate the promise of the Richard Mine project.

"I think the community is becoming aware of what Deckers Creek could look like without the Richard Mine discharge," Denicola said.

Restoration Team member Martin Christ, a former FODC staffer and Denicola's predecessor, said the team consists of various stakeholders who are interested in improving the creek. Among other things, they discuss and prioritize projects and exchange information.

There are others

Richard Mine is the biggest mine drainage project on the creek, but not the only one. Discharge points extend up into Preston County.

Denicola updated team members on four Preston projects in the works and one he hopes to start.

- In the works: ■ The Slabcamp Tributary site, south of Masontown, has five discharge sources and pumps 78,637 pounds of acidity per year into the creek, plus 1,287 pounds of iron and 5,855 pounds of aluminum.
- The Ingrand Mine's four discharges dump in 40,485 pounds of acidity, 3,222 pounds of iron and 3,068 pounds of aluminum. This project and the next two are all east Reedsville.
- Valley Point 12 has two sources, pumping in 32,854 pounds of acidity, 6,761 pounds of iron and 1,620 pounds of aluminum.
- Kanes Creek South No. 1 has a remediation setup but needs upgrades. It deposits 10,485 pounds of acidity, 988 pounds of iron and 370 pounds of aluminum annually.

If there's money available, he said, the Valley Highwall site also needs an upgrade. It deposits 21,955 pounds of acidity, 1,492 pounds of iron and 758 pounds of aluminum per year.

Watershed plan

Denicola's work also includes preparing a Watershed Based Plan.

Christ said that this plan is a prerequisite for Clean Water Act Section 319 funds for non-point source pollution cleanup. When completed, it will be posted on the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) website.

Non-point sources, Christ said, include farm runoff and mines abandoned before the 1977 federal Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act (which allowed coal operators to walk away from ongoing liabilities with the stipulation that anything they disturbed after Aug. 3, 1977, would be reclaimed, according to the DEP).

The plan includes 13 possible remediation projects, such as Dillan Creek, Glady Run, Beulah Hollow and Hartman Run.

Also on the list is the Rock Forge Mine discharge. The Rock Forge mine sits across W.Va. 7 from the Richard Mine. under Eastgate, Denicola said. It discharges into the creek near the same point as the Richard Mine.

The Rock Forge discharge is significantly smaller than Richard's, Denicola said 1,000 pounds of acidity per year. But it makes sense to take care of it. "If we succeed with the multi-million dollar Richard Mine project, it would be embarrassing" to have Rock Forge degrade the last stretch of the creek.

HOMELESS

the homeless community, thanks to a bit of permanent-roof altruism involving Morgantown's Coordinating Council on Homeand lessness landlord James Giuliani.

Giuliani and the counl's executive director, the Rev. John Sonnenday, sat down this spring and talked about it. Several cups of coffee later, and a plan was cast.

"We were talking about the chronically homeless," Sonnenday said. "Those people who had not even been in a shelter. They needed to be off the streets."

Especially people such as Shaffer, who, even though he receives care from Milan Puskar Health Right, a free clinic on Spruce Street that administers to those in need, was camping out in the elements.

Giuliani had a proposal: He'd offer up one of his apartments, rent- and utility-free, until Shaffer could find a job, or start receiving Social Security benefits for his medical con-

"You have to give people a chance," the landlord said. "These are people who don't have anything. Give 'em a place to stay, and see what they can accomplish."

Two weeks ago, Shaffer moved into a Giuliani apartment on Forest Avenue. He was joined by two roommates who had similar backgrounds, David Ervin and Arnold Williams, who were also living in tents in the Morgantown area.

Ervin, 44, grew up in Morgantown and had been employed as a pizza delivery driver and newspaper carrier before a scrape with the law.

Williams spent several years in California as a lineman and heavy equipment operator and also worked on construction projects overseas. He came back to his native West Virginia after the death of his father. He's 68 years old.

Like Shaffer, Ervin and Williams receive care at Milan Puskar Health Right.

Caitlin Sussman, a social worker at the clinic, said the three were tapped because of their medical conditions and their desire turn their circumstances around.

'We did a lot of screening," she said. "If you're going to do a program like this, these are the people who need it the most."

Charles "Alli" Jackson, who ministers to the homeless in 13 West Virginia counties through his work with the outreach agency Connecting Link Inc., will monitor the trio's progress.

That means he'll watch for any incidents of drug or alcohol abuse, or destructive behavior in the apartment.

Not that the men need monitoring, he said. For him, it's all about motivation — and he's not talking about Shaffer, Ervin or Williams.

He wants other landlords in town to get behind Giuliani so the project can expand.

"I have a similar arrangement in Martinsburg that's working well," he said. "A lot of landlords are reluctant to take something like this on."

'I'm grateful to get to live here'

For Sonnenday, such partnerships are the only way to knockdown Morgantown's homelessness problem. The city and Monongalia County are relatively prosperous, he said, and that makes it easy to overlook the segment of the population that isn't.

Coordinating The Council on Homelessness, he said, is notching some victories.

From July, 1, 2013, to the end of June, the council had placed 206 people in permanent housing, Sonnenday said. That's an increase of 42 percent — or 61 people — over the council's efforts in 2012.

Of those 61 people, he said, 39 were chronically homeless. "That means they had been homeless for a year or more," he said. "In some ways, the placement of those 39 people is the most meaningful."

As they stood in their immaculately kept kitchen on Thursday, the roommates said they weren't going to let the opportunity slip past.

Williams, the oldest of the three, said living in the elements took a physical toll.

"At my age, I can really only go one day at a time," he said. "I'm grateful to get to live here." With other decisions behind him, Ervin said he's ready to start working again for his future. "I want to get a job," he said. "I want an income, so I can pay my way." Shaffer said the roof over his head means he can get his health back. He wants to get into permanent housing and said he doesn't have any plans to move back to Ohio.

He appreciates the way things are working out now, he said.

"I like it here. The people here are kind, and helpful. Look at what they're doing for me today."

successful doing that. It's important for me to give back to the community that has been so good to me and my family."

Cliff Sutherland, music and entertainment coordinator for the event, said he and Alexander have been on the board together since day one, which was really 1 1/2 years before Mountain-Fest first took off in Morgantown. Sutherland said that it's been 11 1/2 years since all of it began, but the first festival was held 10 years ago. For Mountain-Fest's 10th year, Sutherland said the event will be a special one.

Inside the doors of the Hazel and J.W. Ruby Community Center at Mylan Park, a collage of past years' memorabilia will be featured as part of a 10th year anniversary museum.

Sutherland said a commemorative wall will be put displaying band T-shirts, posters, photographs, and national and local media cutouts. He said a 10-year selection of clothing will be available, and he even has signed guitars from a number of the bands that rocked the stage each year at the event.

An array of motocycles and bike-related merchandise will be available at MountainFest.

Sutherland said it's crazy to think how far MountainFest has come in 10 years. The first few years weren't so razzledazzle as some would like to believe. But in 2014, festival coordinators are proud of the expected attendance of more than 60,000 people. Sutherland said the rally has begun to develop into an event that people from all over the country mark on their calendars each year.

MountainFest coordinators are not finished with the progress after 10 years, though. In hopes of improving even more, the coordinators are accepting outside input this sum-

Sutherland said they will give surveys to all of the rally's vendors to gage their opinions. He said vendors go all across the country to different events and rallies each year and can be useful for new ideas.

"It's time to start getting input from [vendors]," he said, "you know — ideas, what works, what doesn't work, what would they do different — that type of thing. You can't do the same thing every year."

Alexander said he's really happy to be able to do this every year, even though it's a constant struggle to see what they can pull out of the hat next.

never "Y011 know what's coming down the road for next year," he said. "But we just anxiously await it."

Sunday morning with ... Jason Burns

- 1. Last book read: I read a lot of books. One of the best ways to hone your storytelling and writing skills is to read what others have written — the good and the bad. The book I'm reading now is "A Discovery of Witches," by Deborah Harkness. It involves all the best of spooky elements such as old libraries, witches, vampires, and the search for a magical medieval text. Like all good ghost/monster stories. there's an element to it that teaches you something about humanity and how to be a better person.
- 2. Favorite movie: My favorite movies are the ones that tell a story, and ones that have a little bit of humor and discovery. One of those is "Under the Tuscan Sun," which I've seen hundreds of times.
- 3. Favorite comfort food: Homemade macaroni and cheese with tomatoes. It's a southern West Virginia dish that I simply love — especially in winter.
- 4. If I were king/queen for the day, I would: At the risk of sounding philosophical, I'd outlaw inequality. Life is difficult. It's even worse if you're poor, or disabled, or you're hated simply because you're a different race, a different gender, a different religion, or you have a different sexual orientation. Accomplishments, intellect and goals mean so much more to me than any of that — a person's skin color or who they fall in love with does not preclude them from being a loving, honest and valuable person. Rewarding people for their talents, education and good-hearted nature is important, but there is less value placed on that than being wealthy. I also don't think this equality is a difficult goal to accomplish. The world would be a lot happier place if people took more pride in themselves and cared less about what other people were doing.

5. Striking success: A recent success of mine is the WVU Ghost Tour. Each of the stories I tell is based in folklore or ghostlore about the WVU campus. At first, it was thought that it would only draw a handful of attendees, but the first tour in 2010 drew 109 people. The second vear (even though it was during Superstorm Sandy and the stories were performed indoors) drew 52 people. In 2013, the tour reached 258 attendees! I was concerned it would be too large and no one would be able to hear me, but my little headset microphone and I were able to reach everyone. ... It's something that people genuinely enjoy and I'm glad I could bring it to the campus. This year's tour is already being advertised, and the online Facebook group event already has 111 people signed up to attend.

It's also pretty awesome that I can now say that I performed during a hurricane. For more information, search Facebook for "West Virginia's Spectral Heritage" and look under events.

6. Striking failure: My first job out of college was at a newspaper in Virginia. I worked there for a solid two months, and then it went out of business. Although it was not my fault (the chief editor/owner wasn't the best with finances, apparently), it still destroyed my confidence in my ability as a writer. I moved back to West Virginia after that and started graduate school at WVU. The last time I did a Google search for my former chief editor, I found out that she is serving a life sentence for murdering her boyfriend. She shot him five times in the back and still claimed self-defense. I'm a storyteller, but even I can't make that up.

7. Major pet peeve: My biggest pet peeve is when I'm interrupted while I'm concentrating on a project. When I'm engrossed in writing a story, or reading, or enjoying a moment and then the phone rings or someone interrupts me. It's worse when I'm working on a story, because I'll lose my train of thought and can never get it back.

8 . Favorite childhood memory: Most people who know me wouldn't believe it, but I grew up a country boy near Riverton, on the family homeplace in Pendleton County. For a long time, my family lived on a 500 acre farm in Germany Valley, and my brother and I would run around all day long free as birds — there were tons of animals and the farmhouse was haunted by a Civil War captain with a wooden leg, but I wouldn't trade that experience for anything. A lot of the stories that I perform have their roots in that time period, because that is the point in my life when I was surrounded by parents, grandparents and great-grandparents who were telling the family stories to us. That's the point when I learned the importance of telling stories — it's not simply entertainment. It's a way of keeping our culture and family history alive.

9. Who has had a great influence on me: Definitely my parents, who have been supportive of everything I've ever done. ... I couldn't have done what I've done without them.

10. Favorite junk food: Almost any type of chocolate. When I was a child, I was allergic to chocolate and blew up like a puffer fish when I ate it, but as I got older I grew out of it. Now I tell everyone that I'm making up for lost time. However, I don't care for chocolate with fruit in it. That is a travesty.

11. Favorite subject in school: I always enjoyed anything where I was writing, drawing, or creating something. So it was always English, art and writing classes that I enjoyed the most. Quite often I would zoom through my math and science so that I could take some time to write or draw in class. I would draw cartoons of my friends and I doing funny things, or write silly stories about us. In fifth grade, I started a fake newspaper about my friends and me living in a fictional version of our hometown, and kept it up until we graduated high school. The stories were fictional, but were usually based on something that actually happened. I still have it, and through the years have made copies of it for all my school friends. It's a good source of memories for all of us.

12. If I could have a meal with one person, living or dead, it would be: Without a doubt, my paternal grandmother. Her name was Virginia, but she was born on Easter in 1937 and was forever after known as "Bunny." I was her first grandson (and her favorite, I'm told). Sadly, she passed away when I was 5 years old. Although it's been many years, I still miss her. Throughout my life, I've often felt she's been there guiding me. I'd really like her to know how I turned out, and how happy I am. I still have many of her things and photos in my home, including her purple irises that are now growing in my yard. Her memory has been a source of powerful comfort to me many times. Simply answering this question has taken me to 5 years old again, remembering.

Jazz trumpeter Lionel Ferbos dies at 103

OBITUARIES & NEWS

NEW ORLEANS — Centenarian jazz musician Lionel Ferbos died Saturday at his home, just days after celebrating his 103rd birthday on July 17 with friends and family in the French Quarter.

His granddaughter, Lori Schexnayder, said the trumpeter she called "paw-paw" died peacefully, surrounded by friends and family.

Ferbos performed all over New Orleans and its suburbs for decades. His ability to read music made him an in-demand musician for gigs that took him to parks, schools, churches, dance halls and even prisons. He also performed at his 102nd birthday party and at every New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival until 2013.

Ferbos was believed to be the oldest working jazz musician, performing regularly until last year. He was also the last living member of the WPA band, which was formed during the Depression by laborers in the city's Works Progress Administration.

He had recently become too weak to hold his trumpet, but family members would occasionally hold it to his mouth so that he could blow into it, Schexnayder said. "He missed it so much, but his arms just weren't strong enough to hold it up," she said. Ferbos performed with New Orleans society jazz bands at well-known venues such as the Pelican Club among a string of clubs along Rampart Street — a downtown strip that in the 1920s and '30s was the epicenter of the city's black entertainment district.

Buzz Aldrin: Where were you when I walked on moon?

Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — On July 20, 1969 Buzz Aldrin was "out of town" when the world united and rejoiced in a way never seen before or since.

He and Neil Armstrong were on the moon. They missed the whole celebration 45 years ago today. So did Michael Collins, orbiting solo around the moon in the mother ship.

Now, on this Apollo 11 milestone — just five years shy of the golden anniversary — Aldrin is asking everyone to remember where they were when he and Armstrong became the first humans to step onto another heavenly body, and to share their memories online.

Too young? You can also share how the moonwalkers inspired you.

Celebrities, public figures, and other astronauts and scientists are happily obliging with videos.

"What a day that was," said actor Tom Hanks, sipping from an Apollo 11 commemorative cup. He starred in the 1995 film "Apollo 13," another gripping moon story.

"Going to space is a big deal. Walking on the out of the lunar module,

A waning gibbous moon shines in the sky over Alton, III., as the large American flag from Roberts Motors wraps around it in the breeze. Today marks the 45th anniversary of the Apollo 11 landing on the moon and the first steps there by American astronaut Neil Armstrong. AP photo moon is, literally, walking on the moon," said singer-songwriter Pharrell Williams, born four years afterward.

It's the first big anniversary of man's first moon landing without Armstrong, whose "one small step ... one giant leap" immortalized the moment.

Armstrong, long known for his reticence, died in 2012 at age 82. As Apollo 11's commander, Armstrong was first who stayed behind in lunar orbit as the gatekeeper, also spent decades sidestepping the spotlight. He's making an exception for the 45th anniversary he plans to take part in a NASA ceremony Kennedy Space Center on Monday.

Aldrin, 84, will also be at Monday's ceremony.

Experts: Social media can feed Munchausen by proxy

Associated Press

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y.— Experts say the case of a mother accused of poisoning her 5-year-old son to death with salt appears to be an example of how social media feeds into Munchausen by proxy, a disorder in which caretakers purposely harm children and then bask in the attention and sympathy.

Spears, Lacey Scottsville, Ky., pleaded not guilty to charges of depraved murder and manslaughter in the January death of her son, Garnett-Paul Spears, whose sodium levels rose to a dangerous level with no medical explanation.

As Spears moved around the country - Alabama, Florida and eventually New York - she kept friends updated on her son's frequent hospitalizations with photos and musings on Facebook, Twitter, MySpace and a blog. "My sweet angel is in the hospital for the 23rd time," she tweeted in 2009. A series of reports on the case by The Journal News, which covers the New York suburbs, found she kept it up right through her son's death, with 28 posts in the last 11 days of Garnett's life, including, "Garnett the great journeyed onward today at 10:20 a.m."

Dr. Marc Feldman, a psychiatrist and forensic consultant in Birmingham, Ala., who wrote the book "Playing Sick," said he believes the Internet has contributed to the number of Munchausen by proxy cases, estimated from one study to be more than 600 a year in the U.S.

In a case exposed in 2011 in Great Britain, a childless 21-year-old woman joined an Internet forum for parents, claiming to have five children and chronicling her nonexistent baby's battle with celiac disease and bacterial meningitis. Doctors at Seattle Children's Hospital found three cases of who mothers falsely blogged that their children were near death and were rewarded with support.

"There are instantly accessible and endlessly supportive groups out there that will pray with you and cry with you if you purport your child to be ill," Feldman said.

While lawyers in the Spears case have yet to mention Munchausen in court papers or hearings, experts say the disorder could play a role because Spears fits the pattern of caregivers who invent, exaggerate or cause a health problem in someone in their care and then seek to portray themselves as a hero.

Hot days of summer unbearable for woman

DEAR ABBY: I am, once again, faced with my annual dilemma. I cannot tolerate heat and humidity. I become short of breath, my heart pounds and I perspire profusely. I recover immediately if I go into an air-conditioned area.

I have discussed this with doctors. They attribute it to my "thermostat" and the fact that I am a very fair-skinned redhead. My mother had the same problem.

Of course, I stay in airconditioned places. The problem arises when we're invited to cookouts or to the home of someone whose place isn't airconditioned. I don't know how to explain that I simply cannot come.

I am forever trying to think of excuses to get out of invitations. Even people who know about it don't understand the extent of it. Do you have any thoughts on how to handle this with tact? — HOT AND BOTHERED IN NEW YORK

DEAR HOT AND BOTHERED: Yes, I do. Tell these people the truth. If they're your friends, they will understand.

DEAR ABBY: My husband drives the car with his knees while shaving, drinking coffee, brushing his teeth, talking on the cell and using one hand to steer. When I complain, he makes fun of me and says, "Those that can, do."

We have been married for 30 years, and I know he loves me and isn't trying to kill me. He reads vour column, so maybe you can help me get through to him. -CRINGING IN LONG BRANCH, N.J.

DEAR CRINGING: What your risk-loving husband is doing falls under the category of "distracted driving." Eating, drinking, grooming and using a handheld cellphone are against the law in some states — including yours.

Since you haven't been able to get through to your husband, hang on to the car keys or insist that he finish with his "activities" before starting the ignition. And if he won't cooperate, for your own safety, get out of the car and arrange for other transportation.

The silver lining found through gratitude journal

WHEN SKIES turn gray, it's easy to let yourself dwell on the negative, to let your mind wander to all that is dark and sad.

What a perfect opportunity to turn things around, to list all that is good in the world and focus on the positive.

It's time to update the gratitude journal.

1. Without the rain, how would we appreciate the sunshine? I'm grateful for the rain that makes things grow and that reminds us that sunny days are our preference.

2. Summer provides for travel without the worry of sliding off the road and into a ditch, where one's vehicle could be buried in snow and the driver forced to live on whatever ketchup packets he or she may be able to reach from a trapped, cramped position in the car. I worry about such things and am grateful when they don't happen to me. I'm also grateful for the emergency responders who will eventually come along to free me.

3. Longer days offer us more time to get things done before darkness falls. I'm grateful for the extended daylight that gives me more chances to remove crawly things from my home before I'm left alone with them in the dark. I worry about such things.

4. Though summer is flying by in the wink of an eye, I'm grateful that there are still fun things ahead before the snow falls again. The approach of fall means the Preston County Buckwheat Festival. It's on my mind because I swear we're already having "buckwheat weather" and it's only July. Still, I'm grateful I have the festival to look forward to.

5. Turner Classic Movies always has just what I need when the rain comes down, and inside is my location of choice. Thanks for Nancy Drew and Humphrey Bogart and Shirley Temple and all the great movies — even ones I haven't seen 500 times.

6. The basic necessities that stare me in the face day after day and are ignored: A roof over my head, a warm bed, food within reach, good books to take me anywhere I want to go and friends who support me when I'm beginning to lean. I'm thankful for all I have.

7. I'm grateful for the many ways available to help those who are less fortunate than I. No matter your economic situation, there is always someone who has less. Find them. Help them. You'll feel good, I promise.

8. Sugar-free freezer pops are my favorite year-round treat, but they're especially good after a long summertime commute.

9. Social media can bring you down, and, Lord knows, most folks don't have much to share aside from things 12,000 others have already shared. But there are times when photos appear that you weren't expecting, and messages from long-lost friends who reach out from whatever world they now occupy to remind you that you once shared good times and made lasting memories. It is the out-of-theblueness of those posts that make them so special.

10. In a busy, busy world, there is still time to sit and ponder that which makes us happy, that which lifts us up when we're feeling down. I'm grateful for moments when I can catalog all that's good in my life, rather than dwelling on all that is bad. It makes all the difference in the world.

Count your blessings, my

Good Neighbor Days ends with fireworks

Activities included raffles, arts, rides

The Dominion Post

The final night of Good Neighbor Days kicked off on Saturday with a day full of events and activities in Bruceton Mills.

Thomas Amusements provided games and rides for festival-goers. Kids tested their luck with darts, ring tosses and fishing for prizes. Or they could enjoy a few spins on some of the carnival rides.

FOR more photos, see Pages 2-B and 6-D.

While all of the festivities were going on outside, bingo was being held inside the fire hall, as were the arts and crafts, and raffles. The day started out dreary but the weather cleared up just in time to have everything running smoothly outside, and to close out the night with fireworks.

Rain can't stop Kids' Day Safety

plastic ponchos and put up their umbrellas and continued from stand to stand despite the inclement weather.

Dozens of businesses set up tents for the event within a closed-off section of High Street. Others filled the courthouse square. The Morgantown Utility Board, Ground Zero Fighting Systems, Parents' Place, Mountaineer CrossFit, the Morgantown Early Learning Facility and the Boy Scouts of America were among the various stands set up for parents.

For kids, the activities seemed endless: Face painting, boxing lessons, chicken chuckers, cash cubes, sandboxes, arts and crafts, temporary tattoos, a bouncy castle and much more.

Monongalia County Commissioner Tom Bloom handed out icing covered cookies.

He said the event provided some good fun for kids but also provided information for parents, who could learn about what Morgantown has to offer.

Rachael Krannich and her two daughters agreed.

"I like it. It's a good event for the kids and to get the community together, and it's just fun," she said. "I like how they have things for all ages."

Elijah Thompson, 11, and his brother Malachi Thompson, 6, said they were having a blast.

Elijah said he had the most fun learning to box from Ground Zero Fighting Systems.

Malachi was a bit more interested in the chicken chucker, a game where he used a mallet to launch rubber chickens to a landing target.

"I really liked doing it and winning prizes and yummy cake," he said. "I had a really fun time."

Now is the time to update immunizations

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Four more weeks until school resumes and state health officials want students to be ready.

The West Virginia Department of Health and Human Resources Division of Immunization Services urges parents to ensure children have the proper vaccinations before school starts.

Dr. Letitia Tierney, commissioner of the West Virginia Bureau for Public Health and the state health officer, said now is the best time for parents of students entering kindergarten, seventh and 12th grades to make sure their children have the required immunizations.

■ Children entering a West Virginia school for the first time, from kindergarten through grade 12, are required to have the DTaP, polio, MMR, chickenpox and hepatitis B vaccines. Children who are not behind schedule can receive school-entry "booster" doses in just two vaccinations (DTaP-Polio and MMR-chickenpox) with combination vaccines.

Seventh-graders must show proof they received a dose of Tdap vaccine, which protects against tetanus, diphtheria, pertussis (whooping cough); and a dose of the meningitis vaccine.

Twelfth-graders must show proof of a dose of Tdap and a second dose of the meningitis vaccine, if the first dose of the meningitis vaccine was given before the child's 16th birthday. If the first dose was given after the 16th birthday, a second dose of the meningitis vaccine is not required.

"These immunization requirements will not only lengthen the time for which immunized students are protected from vaccine-preventable diseases, but also will lower their chances of passing diseases to classmates with weakened immune systems, pre-school aged children, infants, the elderly and others," Tierney said.

The Division of Immunization Services encourages parents to schedule vaccinations now. Doctors' offices will be busy with immunizations and sports physicals in the weeks leading up to the start of school.

Cameras will be in residence halls BY ALEX LANG

The Dominion Post

WVU will add roughly 200 security cameras to its campus to enhance safety.

The university recently released a request for bids for a company to provide about 200 Sony security cameras and supporting materials. About 130 of the cameras are a specific type of Sony camera and retail for roughly $1,750. Companies have until 3 p.m. Aug. 5 to submit their bids, according to the bid documents.

There are security cameras throughout campus in areas around the residence halls and in high-traffic areas, Corey Farris, dean of students and director of housing, said. The students know that there are cameras and many of their locations.

For example, there are cameras in the residence hall elevators and students know they are there. If someone commits an act of vandalism, a residence assistant can identify that student as the perpetrator. The word then spreads among the students.

The new cameras will mainly monitor the entrances and exits of the residence halls, Farris said. WVU has 14 residence halls, not including places such as Vandalia Apartments and College Park Apartments.

WVU Police Chief Bob Roberts said a few of the new cameras will monitor roads, such as University Avenue, but the bulk will be in the residence halls.

If the department receives a call or a complaint, its officers can look up the video in real time as others respond, Roberts said. Investigators can also use them during the course of their work. The video feed comes to the department's command center, but the department won't have personnel sitting, watching the cameras.

Roberts said there hasn't been an uptick of criminal activity around the residence halls. The new cameras are just another layer of security.

WVU also has several security measures in addition to cameras, including email alerts and doors that open by card swipe, Farris said.

The U.S. News rankings recognize hospitals that excel in caring for patients who need the highest levels of care. Rankings are based on objective data measures, such as patient safety, nurse staffing levels, and other information.

WVU Hospitals is one of only 20 health providers in the nation to earn Hospital & Health Network magazine's 2014 Most Wired - Advanced designation.

MOUNTAIN & LAKES (WV)

This award recognizes hospitals that use information technology to help provide excellent care.

The more than 50,000 WVU Healthcare patients who use MYWVUChart can message their doctors, request an appointment or a prescription refill, view their test results, and more, in a secure, online patient portal. WVU Hospitals also has many behind-the-scenes processes that use the highest levels of information techology — to provide our patients with the best care experience possible.

WE DON'T DO WHAT WE DO TO WIN AWARDS. BUT IT'S NICE TO BE RECOGNIZED.

WVU Hospitals is a member of the West Virginia United Health System.

According to WVU's annual Clery Report, the number of violent crimes has decreased over the last few years. In 2009, there were 78 violent crimes; the number dropped to 58, in 2013. The number of property crimes has also decreased from 353 to 293 in the same time span.

However, the number of drugs, liquor and weapons arrests increased. In 2009, there were 504 arrests; in 2013 that figure was up to 1.239.

WVU's Office of Information Technology Services has standards for regulation of security cameras, though WVU Police developed formal procedures. The policy went into effect in 2013. The standards have four purposes: To achieve a safe and secure campus and to protect university property, to support the mission of the WVU Police Department, to provide transparency in the use of security cameras and to ensure protection of individual privacy rights. According to the standards, the security cameras must be integrated into the WVU Police Department's video management system.

Security cameras are not to be placed in areas where there is a reasonable expectation of privacy, such as restrooms or employee lounges, according to the RECOGNIZED IN 12 SPECIALTIES standard. All WVU buildings are subject to security camera coverage.

W.Va. city seeks to sell truck scales, never used

Associated Press

MOUNDSVILLE — A Northern Panhandle city is looking to sell road scales officials purchased in 2010 amid the gold rush for natural gas.

Moundsville chased the scales to weigh trucks officials believed were carrying too much cargo. The hope was the weight checks would spare unnecessary damage to city streets from overloaded trucks, which has been a problem in some localities where natural gas is drilled in Marcellus Shale.

But Vice Mayor David Wood said he does not believe the scales have ever been used.

Now, Moundsville is looking to sell the scales to Powhatan Point. The village across the Ohio River in Belmont County has to contend with potentially overweight vehicles associated with natural gas drilling and coal mining industries, according to Police Chief Jason West.

Drilling-related trucks driving throughout the upper Ohio Valley include so-called sand cans, which transport fracking sand to the gas well sites. There are also water trucks, equipment trucks, and tanker trucks that could carry natural gas liquids such as propane.

"We do have a lot of truck traffic. It is always a concern," Wood said. "Certainly, there is wear and tear on the streets from this."

Moundsville Police Chief Thomas Mitchell declined to say why Moundsville never used the scales, other than saying it's "hard to weigh trucks."

Wood said the city paid about $9,000 for the scales at the time of their purchase.

"We just don't have the manpower in our police department to handle it," Wood said. "There are so many ways in and out of Moundsville that for us to tie up officers' time weighing trucks, it just wouldn't make sense."

Study: National parks boost economy in West

JACKSON, Wyo. — National parks and monuments boosted the economies of surrounding communities in Wyoming, Montana and Idaho by a combined $1.15 billion in 2013, according to a study.

Wyoming saw $723.3 million in spending by visitors to parks and monuments run by the National Park Service; Montana, $397.3 million; and Idaho, $29.4 million.

On Friday, the National Park Service released a report that said spending on hotels, restaurants, gas and supplies by visitors to U.S. national parks in 2013 contributed $14.6 billion in economic benefits to communities within 60 miles of the parks nationwide.

Wyoming, Idaho and Montana share parts of Yellowstone National Park. where visitors spent almost $382 million in nearby communities. Yellowstone had 3.18 million visitors in 2013.

The study showed that 49 percent of Yellowstone benefited spending Wyoming and 51 percent benefited Montana.

Visitors to Grand Teton

National Park and the adjoining John D. Rockefeller Jr. Memorial Parkway spent more than $502 million in northwest Wyoming and eastern Idaho communities.

"We understand the part we play in creating a healthy and sustainable economic base, and we appreciate the support of area businesses, neighbors and park partners for our national parks," Grand Teton National Park Superintendent David Vela said in a statement. More than 2 million visited Glacier National Park in Montana, spending more than $178 million.

Communities around Craters of the Moon National Monument in southern Idaho saw $6.6 million in economic benefits from visitors.

"This new report confirms that national park tourism is a significant driver in the national economy, returning $10 for every $1 invested in the National Park Service," Sue Masica, the National Park Service's Intermountain Region director, said.

Cubs sue over fake mascot that fought

CHICAGO — The Chicago Cubs have filed a lawsuit against several people whom the team accuses of being behind a fake mascot that has been engaging in bad behavior near Wrigley Field, including getting into a bar fight that was captured on video and posted online.

The team filed its lawsuit on Friday in federal court in Chicago against John Paul Weier, Patrick Weier and three other unnamed individuals whom the team says dress in the bear costume, the Chicago Sun-Times reported.

The fake mascot — not to be confused with the team's new official mascot, "Clark the Cub" — wears a Cubs hat and number 78 jersey that has the name "Billy Cub" on the back.

Hundreds rally, seek end to Gaza crisis

DENVER — Hundreds gathered for a rally at the State Capitol and a march through downtown Denver to call for an end to what they called a humanitarian crisis brought on by conflict in Gaza.

Demonstrators waving red, black, white and green Palestinian flags and signs that read "End Collective Punishment" gathered on the Capitol lawn Saturday. Denver police said the group marched peacefully through Denver.

The rally was organized by a coalition of groups supporting a Palestinian homeland.

Prison roof in Texas collapses, 19 hurt

DIBOLL, Texas — Authorities said the roof of a privately run East Texas prison has collapsed, temporarily trapping dozens of inmates and sending 19 injured inmates to hospitals.

One of those inmates was later airlifted to Memorial Hermann Hospital in Houston after the Saturday collapse at Diboll Correctional Center, about 100 miles northeast of Houston. Neither his identity nor his condition has been released.

In a statement, a prison spokesman said the other inmates suffered cuts and bruises when wallboard fell from the ceiling of a housing area at the prison about 11:30 a.m.

Fugitive found in Nepal back in New Mexico custody

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. - A New Mexico man who fled sex abuse and kidnapping charges 14 years ago returned to the state Saturday following his capture in Nepal, the FBI said.

Neil Stammer, 47, arrived in the afternoon at the Albuquerque International Sunport, FBI spokesman Frank Fisher said.

Stammer will be booked on outstanding warrants at the Bernalillo County Metropolitan Detention Center, according to Albuquerque police.

Stammer was arrested in 1999 on allegations of criminal sexual penetration of a minor, kidnapping, intimidation of a witness, battery and criminal sexual contact of a minor. Stammer was allowed to bond out before his arraignment, authorities said.

Police seek driver in deadly bank heist

FRESNO, Calif. — While police in the Northern California city of Stockton searched Saturday for an accomplice in a bank robbery that led to a police chase and deadly shootout, investigators said they suspect the same men carried out other area bank heists, including one at the same branch hit this week.

Officer Joe Silva of the Stockton Police Department said there are striking similarities between a late-January robbery at the Bank of the West and one Wednesday that left a hostage and two robbers dead. In both cases, Silva said, armed robbers made their get-away by stealing a bank employee's car.

THINGS TO KNOW

Associated Press

DENVER — On July 20, 2012, a man wearing policestyle armor killed 12 people and injured 70 during a midnight showing of "The Dark Knight Rises" in the Denver suburb of Aurora. James Holmes, a former neuroscience graduate student, pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity in the shootings. His attorneys say he was gripped by a psychotic episode. Here are things to know on the second anniversary today:

■ THE TRIAL: Now scheduled to start Dec. 8, after three postponements. The first was when prosecutors said they would seek the death penalty; the second, when prosecutors asked for a second state evaluation Holmes; the third, when a doctor doing that exam asked for more time.

■ JURY SELECTION: Seating 12 jurors and 12 alternates will take months. Judge Carlos A. Samour Jr. will issue a summons to 6,000 people and expects 3,300 candidates. They'll fill out questionnaires and undergo questioning.

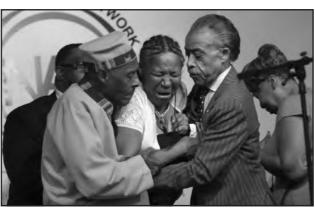

■ OUTCOMES: If found guilty, Holmes could face the death penalty. If found not guilty to-wall screen.

by reason of insanity, he would be committed indefinitely to the state mental hospital.

■ HOLMES: 26-year-old sits quietly in shackles during hearings and stares straight ahead. He no longer has the vacant, wide-eyed stare of his first hearings. Whether he could tell right from wrong in the shooting the key finding of the first sanity exam — wasn't released. But the judge agreed with prosecutors that the doctor was biased and ordered a second exam that's due Oct. 15.

■ SURVIVORS: Tom Teves, of Phoenix, lost his son, Alex, 24. He's frustrated by the slow progress. "That individual (Holmes) has a multitude more rights than any of the victims," he said. "I think it's (the grief) like carrying around a big weight. You get stronger carrying it around, but it never gets lighter.'

■ THE THEATER: The former Century 16 was renovated and renamed the Century Aurora. It opened its doors to victims of the attack in January 2013 with a remembrance and a special showing of "The Hobbit." Theater 9 is an XD theater with a wall-

An overcome Esaw Garner was escorted from the Rev. Al Sharpton's National Action Network headquarters in Harlem, which was packed with hundreds of people. Monitors try to secure plane crash site

HRABOVE, Ukraine — International monitors moved gingerly Saturday through fields reeking of the decomposing corpses of the victims of a Malaysian airliner shot down over rebel-held eastern Ukraine, trying to secure the sprawling site in hopes that a credible investigation of the disaster can be conducted.

The crash that killed all 298 people aboard the plane two days earlier intensified the already-high animosity on all sides of the conflict.

Officials: Gunmen kill 15 troops

CAIRO — At least 15 Egyptian border guard troops were killed in an attack Saturday by gunmen using rocket-propelled grenades in the country's western desert, security officials said.

An Interior Ministry official and a military official said the gunmen opened fire at a checkpoint in the western desert governorate of Wadi el-Gedid, on the Farafra Oasis Road, about 310 miles from Cairo. Farafra is the country's western most oasis, near the border with Libya.

The officials said three attackers were killed in ensuing clashes. A medical official said five troops, including officers, were wounded.

The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak to journalists.

Erdogan: Israel worse than Hitler

ANKARA, Turkey — Turkish Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan has accused Israel of "barbarism that surpasses Hitler" during its ground invasion of Gaza.

Erdogan accused Israel of using disproportionate force in Gaza and said the operation there has derailed efforts to normalize Turkish-Israeli ties. The ties soured after Israel's 2010 raid on an aid ship which killed eight Turks and a Turkish-American.

Erdogan spoke in a campaign speech Saturday in the Black Sea port city of Ordu. He is running for the presidency in elections in August.

Multiple-bus crash in Germany kills 10

BERLIN — A crash involving several buses on a highway in eastern Germany killed 10 people and injured 69, police said Saturday.

The crash near Dresden occurred shortly before 2 a.m. when a Polish bus hit the rear of a Ukrainian bus and then broke through the median barrier, slamming into a Polish minibus traveling in the opposite direction, police said. The larger vehicle partly crushed the minibus before rolling down a verge.

Police said nine people died at the scene, and a 10th person succumbed to injuries in a hospital. At least seven of the victims were traveling in the minibus, but it was unclear where the other three had been, police spokeswoman Jana Ulbricht said.

The joint U.N. African Union Mission in Darfur said in a statement that the three were released after 32 days in captivity. It said they appear to be unharmed.

The statement identified one of the three Sudanese workers as an employee of UNICEF, the U.N.'s children agency. It said two others work for the Irish humanitarian agency GOAL.

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — Israeli troops uncovered more than a dozen cross-border tunnels and battled Gaza militants on the second day of an open-ended ground operation Saturday, as the Palestinian death toll climbed past and diplomats scrambled to revive cease-fire efforts.

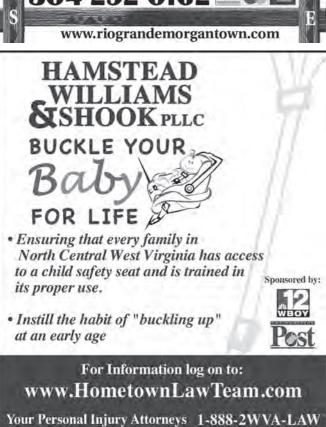

The Israeli military said it had severely diminished the arsenal of Hamas, the Islamic militant group ruling Gaza, but the militants have continued to fire rockets.

In the northern Gaza Strip, Palestinian officials reported intensified Israeli airstrikes, shelling and numerous civilian casualties. Gaza Health Ministry spokesman Ashraf al-Kidra said the new round of strikes raised the death toll from the 12-day offensive to more than 330 Palestinians, many of them civilians and nearly a fourth of them under the age of 18.

Media Days useful in charting course for team's journey

THESE CONFERENCE media days are an interesting animal. Perhaps you're tired of the noise: Reused clichés about how teams are excited to get started. how the league is wide open and the conference's talent is as rich as ever. Every year and from every conference, you'll hear all that.

Ah, but these media events that have turned into circus-like extravaganzas with mascots and cheerleaders milling around matter. They do. They do more than feed the growing hunger as the season still sits more than a month away. They offer more than updates and stories on the game's top characters, too.

They are part of the process that paints the picture for each individual team's journey.

A team is hot or not, rising or falling, under the bright lights or politely dismissed. At the least, that stuff interests many and, in my opinion, can prove rather meaningful.

Why else would coaches weave what "they say" into their team discussions? And why should an athletic director or university president care? Well, a Saturday night under the ESPN lights may prove a little more lucrative than a noon game on your local affiliate. No school can drum up a catchy public-relations initiative that comes close to matching the goodwill earned from those campus scenery shots we see in and out of commercial breaks. We could bring up ticket sales here, but it's a simple fact: People want to watch entertaining winners.

Now let's go back to how it affects individual teams. In the same week WVU landed one player on the all-Big 12 preseason team and was projected to finish eighth in the 10-team conference Alabama tied the SEC record with nine first-team selections. OK, OK, so big surprise that Alabama should be good again.

But Tide coach Nick Saban repeatedly reminded reporters that, in 22 years, the media have never predicted the Crimson Tide to win the league title in years it did. And when the media picked Alabama to win it, the Crimson Tide didn't.

There are numerous stories about successful programs battling complacency, and Saban's obedience to "The Process" year after year is why he's the best coach in the game today. He must convince his players that the team is at stage one although the program is at elite level. If you don't think he does that — and must do that — you're fooling yourself.

Now fast-forward to Tuesday, inside the Dallas Omni Hotel ballrooms, and you'll hear a group of Mountaineers (head coach Dana Holgorsen, cornerback Daryl Worley, wide receiver Kevin White and punter Nick O'Toole) discuss how they're anxious to prove themselves. The comments may be laced with underlying tones of feeling disrespected and underappreciated. That doesn't happen by accident.

Compare that to two years ago, when Geno Smith, Tavon Austin and Mountaineer mascot Jonathan Kimble were the main attractions at the 450-plus media event. Smith was prompted into singing "Country Roads," while Kimble handed out his famous jerky to everyone.

And really, that doesn't matter. Because it's all about who handles their journey the best that matters most.

Schools buy into buyouts

Contract clause is common for many coaches

BY TODD MURRAY

The Dominion Post

When college-sports fans think of the term "buyout," images of their favorite school's head football and men's basketball coaches spring to mind.

"Buyout" became a popular term around West Virginia when

King

then-Mountaineers football coach Rich Rodriguez bolted for Michigan, in December 2007.

Rodriguez and

mately paid his $4 million buyout to settle a lawsuit filed by WVU, with Rodriguez forking over $1.5 million and

Michigan

Michigan $2.5 million. For years, these buyout clauses — money a coach must pay the school when he or she leaves for another job — were the exclusive domain of football and men's basketball coaches.

Not anymore.

At WVU, buyout clauses also refer to as liquidated damages — have become the norm for head coaches in most sports.

Only women's rowing coach Jimmy King did not have one in his latest contract, which expired June 30.

King said he has not signed his new contract. He continues to work under the terms of his previous contract, WVU senior associate athletic director Kelli Cunningham said.

King said the buyout clause has never come up in discussions about his contract. King works on one-year contracts and said he is happy with that.

Buyouts are "more common across the country," said WVU athletic director Oliver Luck, who does not have a buyout in his contract. "I've talked to A.D.s at various meetings I've had, and it seems to be more commonplace. I think they make some sense."

Jim Marchiony, associate athletics director for external relations at Kansas, said these buyouts are common in head-coach-

$2.5M payday for WVU vs. Virginia Tech

Teams meet in football at FedExField in 2017

BY ED OWENS

The Dominion Post

WVU and Virginia Tech will each earn $2.5 million for appearing in the 2017 football season opener at FedExField, home of the NFL's Washington Redskins.

By comparison, the Mountaineers are guaranteed $3.2 million for participating in this year's Chick-fil-A Kickoff Game, against Alabama, in Atlanta, on Aug. 30.

According to contracts obtained by The Dominion Post, WVU and Virginia Tech have matching incentives for selling tickets to the 2017 game, which will be played Sept. 2.

If the game attendance reaches 62,500, both schools will receive a $125,000 bonus; that will increase to $250,000 if the game attendance hits 69,000.

There are a few differences between the contracts, though. WVU will receive six complimentary suites for the game at FedEx-Field, while the Hokies will have three suites. The contract also calls for Virginia Tech to receive 1,050 complimentary tickets and 48 parking passes. WVU's contract guarantees the Mountaineers 900 complimentary tickets but no parking passes.

WVU has been designated as the visiting team for the game, which will re-ignite the rivalry for the Black Diamond Trophy. The two teams haven't played since 2005, two years after the Hokies left the Big East for the ACC.

Mike Montoro, WVU's director of football communications, confirmed that the Black Diamond Trophy will be on the line during the 2017 game, as well as during the teams' home-and-home series

The Trinity Christian School girls' soccer team finished its three-week practice sessions with its new coach, Ryan Wise.

Wise was an assistant coach for the Warriors this past season and an assistant coach for the coed team the year before.

Wise said the time he spent with the girls showed him who was ready to step up on the team.

"We've had a lot of leadership come out with some of the girls who played last year, and that's what we need," he said. "As a coach, that is what you want to see, that's my main priority, seeing who's going to lead the team."

Coaches can't tell the girls everything they need to know while they're playing the game, Wise said, which is why having those on-the-field team leaders is so important to him. The Warriors went 8-10 this past

Big names still on NFL unemployment line

PRO FOOTBALL

Associated Press

NEW YORK — MISS-ING: A handful of former NFL stars.

REWARD: An opportunity to help a team and revive a once-flourishing career.

With NFL training camps about to open, several big-name players are still unemployed, waiting anxiously, wondering when or if — they'll get a call.

Retirement could be the next step for former All-Pros such as Ed Reed and James Harrison.

"I know that I can still play," Reed said at a charity softball game in Baltimore in June. "It's just a matter of the right fit."

Jermichael Finley is coming off a career-threatening injury. Tim Tebow hasn't been with a team in almost a year. Santonio Holmes, Ronnie Brown, Asante Samuel, Jonathan Vilma and Kellen Winslow Jr. are among former stars on the downside of their careers.

"I could retire," Winslow wrote on Twitter in June, "but that's not who I am."

Here's a look at a few familiar unsigned free agents:

Ronnie Brown

Once one of the NFL's most dynamic running backs, Brown, 32, comes off a season during which he ran for 157 yards and caught eight passes as a backup for the Chargers. If he has played his last game, he went out in style: Brown had a 58-yard touchdown run against the Bengals in a first-round playoff victory.

Josh Cribbs

He has eight career kickoff returns for touchdowns, sharing the NFL mark with the Titans' Leon Washington, and could be a fit for a team looking for a spark on special teams. That's what he was for the Jets this past year, when he was signed a few games into the season, but then missed the final four weeks with a shoulder injury.

Jermichael Finley

His career was in jeopardy when he suffered a serious neck injury in October, with Green Bay. Finley was establishing himself as one of the league's elite pass-catching tight ends. That has had several teams interested this offseason, including the Packers, despite questions about his health.

Josh Freeman

Talk about a turn of events. Once considered a potential franchise quarterback for Tampa Bay, Freeman was benched this past season in favor of rookie Mike Glennon, then released. He signed with the Vikings, was terrible in his one start and finished the season as Minnesota's third-stringer. The Giants signed him in the offseason as insurance for Eli Manning, but cut him in May.

James Harrison

A menace to quarterbacks who frequently was fined for illegal hits, and a regular critic of Commissioner Roger Goodell, the 2008 NFL Defensive Player of the Year is 36, had a reduced role in his one season in Cincinnati and has seen his sack totals decrease every year since 2010.

Santonio Holmes

Tone Time might be running out. The Super Bowl MVP with the Steelers in had three interceptions in 2009, Holmes, 30, was terrific in his first two seasons after being traded to the Jets, in 2010. But he has just 43 catches in 15 games in the past two years. He suffered a serious foot injury in 2012 and missed five games this past season with a hamstring problem.

Richie Incognito

He'll always be known for his role in the harassment of former teammate Jonathan Martin, another offensive lineman and an assistant trainer this past season. Incognito was suspended and missed the final eight games with Miami. The bullying scandal, along with being 31, might make it tough for the guard to find a suitor.

Ed Reed

A year ago, the newly signed Reed was considered a key piece of the Texans' improved defense. But he underwent hip surgery in the offseason, missed the first two games, then lost his starting job at safety. Reed was released after seven games, but reunited with Rex Ryan in New York and seven games with the Jets. He'll be 36 in September.

Asante Samuel

Helped the Patriots to two Super Bowls early in his career as one of the league's top ballhawking cornerbacks. After four seasons with the Eagles, they traded him to the Falcons, in 2012. Samuel is 33, but still productive — although he was limited to 11 games this past season and relegated to backup duty.

Tim Tebow

Sure, many critics might have written him off and he's got a TV gig with the SEC Network. But as long as the polarizing quarterback is still available, plenty will wonder if anyone will sign him. After a failed 2012 with the Jets, he spent this past summer in camp with the Patriots before being cut. Teams aren't sold on his throwing skills, and might not want to deal with the distractions that come with Tebow.

Jonathan Vilma

A tackling machine early in his career with the Jets and Saints, he then dealt with knee injuries and ineffectiveness. He also was identified in 2012 as a ring leader of New Orleans' bounty program. Vilma missed the first five games of that season while rehabilitating his left knee, and played in only one game this past year because of it.

Kellen Winslow Jr.

The tight end caught 31 passes in 12 games with the Jets and showed flashes, but missed four weeks for violating the NFL's performance enhancing substances policy. He was also arrested in November on suspicion of synthetic marijuana possession, but was granted a conditional discharge — meaning the charge could be dismissed after a year.

Eric Winston

The 30-year-old right tackle has started 119 consecutive games, spanning his first six NFL seasons with the Texans, a season in Kansas City and this past year in Arizona. He wasn't re-signed by the Cardinals, and some wonder if the lack of interest is due in part to Winston becoming president of the NFL Players Association.

BRITISH OPEN

McIlroy roars to big lead

Ahead by 6 strokes but, 'I'm not taking anything for granted'

COMPLETE scorelist in Scoreboard. Page 2-C. TV: 6 a.m. today, ESPN, Comcast channels 35, 850.

Associated Press

HOYLAKE, England — Rory McIlroy looks as if he has just thrown a knockout punch at the British Open, and it was only Saturday.

When he rolled in a 10toot eagle putt on the ilnai hole for a 4-under 68, he straightened his back, stared defiantly at thousands of fans crammed into horseshoe arena around the 18th green at Royal Liverpool and lightly pumped his fist.

He went from being tied for the lead to six shots ahead of Rickie Fowler in just over an hour.

Suddenly, the biggest challenge facing the 25-year-old from Northern Ireland was reminding himself that he had one more round left.

McIlroy can't afford to picture his name etched on the base of that silver claret jug. He can't think about what it will be like next April to drive down Magnolia Lane at Augusta National with a shot at becoming the sixth player to capture the career Grand Slam.

"I'm not taking anything for granted," McIlroy said. He knows that from experience, good and bad. He blew a four-shot lead at the Masters in 2011 and shot 80 in the final round. He had an eight-shot lead at the U.S. Open two months later and set two scoring records to win by eight. And just two months ago, McIlroy came from seven shots behind to win by seven. It looks like a lost cause for Fowler, Sergio Garcia and anyone else trying to chase down a guy who has won both his majors by eight shots. The six-shot lead was the largest at The Open since Dustin Johnson (left) studies his putt on the 15th green with Rory McIlroy behind him Saturday, during the third day of the British Open golf championship.

Tiger Woods led by six at St. I can put a little bit of pres-Andrews, in 2000.

McIlroy was doing his best to preach caution.

"A lot can happen," he said. "And I've been on the right side of it and I've been on the wrong side of it. You can't let yourself think forward. You've just got to completely stay in the moment, and that's what I'm going to try to do for all 18 holes tomorrow."

History is on his side.

No one has ever lost a six-shot lead in the 121 years that The Open has contested been 72 holes. Boy Wonder would not seem to be a candidate.

"What you have with him is he's just so explosive," Jim Furyk said, after a 71 left him 10 shots behind. "He won the U.S. Open by eight shots. He obviously doesn't have any issue as the front-runner, and has no issue trying to extend that lead, much like Tiger used to."

McIlroy was at 16-under

"If I'm able to go out and get off to a good start, maybe sure on him," Fowler said, after a 68. "Because he's definitely in control of the golf tournament right now."

Fowler tried to do his part on a cloudy Saturday with occasional rain, but not nearly what the R&A expected when it went to a two-tee start of the first time in history. Fowler, who was six shots behind going into the third round, ran off three straight birdies to start the back nine and shared the lead when McIlroy made bogey on No. 12.

It all changed quickly. Fowler made a bogey on the 14th hole. McIlroy, playing in the group behind, drilled a 35-foot birdie putt that put his lead back to two shots.

"Rickie was just getting close to me," McIlroy said. "I could hear the cheers in front of me. I just wanted to get ahead. To hole a putt like that was huge."

And that's when he turned it on.

McIlroy blasted a drive on the par-5 16th hole, hit 4-iron from 252 yards over a pot bunker to the left side of the green and made a 15-foot eagle putt. That restored his lead to five shots, for Fowler had driven into a pot bunker and made a bogey.

Fowler recovered with a superb shot out of the pot bunker on the 18th to tap-in range for birdie. That put the American into the final group for the second straight major, both times a long way out of the lead. He trailed Martin Kaymer by five shots going into the last day of the U.S. Open at Pinehurst No. 2.

Fowler didn't get closer than four shots from Kaymer in the final round.

Garcia, who played in the final group with Woods at Royal Liverpool in 2006, certainly had his chances. He was only three shots behind at the turn until missing a short birdie putt on No. 12 and failing to convert many other chances. Garcia had a 69 and was seven shots behind, along with Dustin Johnson (71).

"It's going to be difficult," Garcia said. "But we'll give it a shot."

Woods keeps going in wrong direction

NOTEBOOK

Associated Press

HOYLAKE, England — Tiger Woods was the last to tee off Saturday in the British Open. He had the biggest gallery. It might have seemed like old times for Woods in the major championships except for one tiny detail.

He was starting on the 10th tee in last place. And this third round didn't get much better.

Woods British Open with five birdies in a six-hole stretch for a 69 that put him only three shots behind Rory McIlroy. He walked off Royal Liverpool on Saturday with another round over par, leaving him 19 shots out of the lead.

"Made a lot of mistakes," Woods said. Woods was 5-over par on the opening two holes going into the weekend. At least he was able to start with a par 5 on Saturday at No. 10, and he opened with a pair of birdies. That was about as good as it got.

He made a double bogey for the second straight day, this time at No. 2. He drove into a gorse bush on the seventh fairway and made a triple bogey for the second straight day. The damage added to a 73.

"I've made two doubles and two triples," Woods said. "But on top of that, I missed a lot of shots for opportunities for birdies, and consequently I'm 3-over par."

Woods is playing for only the second time since back surgery on March 31. He missed the cut at Congressional, three weeks ago. He has not mentioned anything about pain from his back surgery, which is good news for him. And he said he was starting to get into the flow of playing tournament golf again.

"But still, I've just made too many mistakes," he said. "You can't run up high scores like that and expect to contend, especially when the conditions are this benign. Most of the scores are 3-under par or better. I certainly didn't do that."

Woods was tied for 58th. Except for missing the cut five years ago, at Turnberry, he has never finished out of the top 30 in the British Open.

This week doesn't seem to provide any answers about being picked for the Ryder Cup. U.S. captain Tom Watson has said he wants Woods on the team provided he is healthy and playing well. Woods at least is playing better than Watson, 64, who shot a 75 and is two shots behind Woods.

Watson had hoped to talk to Woods this week about the Ryder Cup. Watson said all he had time to say to Woods was, "Hello."

Clarke's rebound

Darren Clarke has only two top 10s in the three years since he won The Open at Royal St. George's — a runner-up against a weak field in China, and a tie for eighth in the Australian PGA Championship.

He gave himself a chance for another with a 5-under 67 on Saturday, matching the best score of the day. Clarke was 11 shots out of the lead and in a tie for 12th.

"I've been playing OK for quite some time," Clarke said. "Today I holed a couple of putts and managed to keep some momentum going.

Of course, he has had to adjust to a new body. Clarke lost 50 pounds after seeing photos of himself that he thought made him look too large.

"I'm not as fat as I was," he said. "So my timing, it took me a little bit of time to adjust to that. The ballstriking has been pretty good. I just need to knock in a few putts and get some momentum going. It feels like I've started to do that."

high schools.

Wise said the obstacle he sees going into next season is playing the larger area

"We always have the challenge of playing bigger schools when it gets to sectional and regional time," he said. "We're in the region with Fairmont Senior, which is tough because they're a bigger school." Aside from competing well with the big high schools, Wise said he wants to see the team grow.

"We've talked about goals and they all say, 'State champs,' or, 'Regional champs,' and I told them our goal needs to be getting better every day," he said.

"Those are destinations. That's what we're making our goal this year, and I think if we do that then winning will come."

When WVU played Syracuse in the 2012 Pinstripe Bowl, the teams did not play for the Schwartzwalder Trophy, which had been given to the rivalry game's winner every year since 1993.

The Mountaineers and Hokies have met 51 times, with WVU holding a 28-22-1 edge in the series. The teams met annually from 1973-2005 and Virginia Tech won seven of the last 10 matchups before the rivalry was put on ice.

Hokies athletic director Whit Babcock is a WVU graduate and a former assistant athletic director for the Mountaineers. He was hired at Virginia Tech in January.

The 2017 game will be WVU's third at FedEx-Field in six years. The Mountaineers defeated James Madison, 42-12, in 2012, and will take on BYU in a neutral-site game, in 2016. With East Carolina and Virginia Tech on the books, WVU has only one remaining nonconference game to schedule for 2017.

Majka wins 14th stage; Nibali extends lead

Poland's Rafal Majka crosses the finish line to win the 14th stage of the Tour de France cycling race over 110 miles Saturday.

RISOUL, France — Rafal Majka, of Poland, won the 14th stage of the Tour de France — a second day of punishing Alpine climbs and over the highest point on the race — and Vincenzo Nibali again extended his overall lead by finishing second Saturday.

Majka led a breakaway on the final climb in the 110-mile roller-coaster course over two infamous climbs, including the 7,742-foot Izoard pass, and a finish up to Risoul ski station.

The one-two result was the flip of Friday's entree into the Alps: Nibali won, and Majka was second.

Majka's victory was the first on this Tour by his Tinkoff-Saxo Bank team, which lost main leader Alberto Contador when he crashed out injured on Stage 10.

"I am really very happy," Majka, who was sixth in the Giro d'Italia this year, said of his first Tour stage win. "I am a little tired, but ... I had a calm first week to help Alberto. It broke my heart to see him leave."

Team owner Oleg Tinkov, a Russian businessman, choked up, wiped his nose, and put on sunglasses.

"We lost Alberto, we had to win," he said through a translator on French TV. "Rafal is a marvelous young rider. We will come back to try to win the Tour one day."

The stage didn't shake up the top five standings. Nibali strengthened his hold on the yellow jersey, making the Tour from here to the finish in eight days in Paris looking more and more like a race for podium spots behind him.

Nibali crossed 24 seconds behind Majka, followed by Jean-Christophe Peraud, in third, two seconds slower. Two French riders, Thibaut Pinot and Romain Bardet, conducted a two-man sprint and crossed another 24 seconds back. American Tejay van Garderen was fifth, 54 seconds back of the Polish rider. Aleiandro Valverde lost a minute to Nibali.

Overall, the Italian leads second-place Valverde by 4:37, and third-place Bardet by 4:50.

ing contracts at his school. "Not all of the coaches have them, but most of them do," he said.

Steve Malchow, senior associate athletic director at Iowa State, said the buyout clauses are also common among the Cyclones' head-coaching contracts.

Baylor and TCU, private institutions, declined to discuss their coaches' contracts. The Dominion Post has filed Freedom of Information Act requests for coaches' contracts from Texas, Texas Tech, Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and Kansas State. Those five schools did not respond to questions in time for this report.

As for why buyouts have increasingly shown up in contracts of head coaches of all sports, Luck said he's not sure.

"I just think it's something that folks have on the radar screen more now than they did in the past," he said.

$4 million to $10,000

The buyouts at WVU range from $4 million, for nen's basketball coach Bob Huggins, to $10,000, for rifle coach Jon Hammond. Luck said the buyout number for each head coach is part of the negotiation of the contract.

"I think it all depends on the individual and the coach and the coach's agent, coach's lawyer or whoever it is," Luck said.

WVU women's soccer coach Nikki Izzo-Brown said she has never been a proponent of buyout clauses.

"If anyone wants to better their family, they should have the freedom to do that," said Izzo-Brown, who started the women's soccer program at WVU, in 1996. "That's just my philosophy on it. I can understand where athletic departments are trying to protect themselves. I'm not a huge fan of it. There are a lot of administrators and people who can move freely, but, again, it's part of the business." Buyout clauses work both ways. The head-coaching contracts at WVU stipulate that if WVU fires the coach for reasons other than cause, the coach is owed his or her base salary for the remainder of the contract.

Sean Cleary, WVU's women's cross-country and track and field head coach, doesn't have an attorney who reviews his contract, although he said he might in the future.

Ilora Cipolat, Cleary's administrative assistant and a law-school graduate, reviews his contract for him.

Cleary said he is fine with the buyout clause in his deal, which would require him to pay $25,000 for each remaining year on his contract, which expires June 30, 2016.

Cleary said he views WVU's wanting a buyout clause in his deal as a sign of respect for his abilities as a coach.

"It's a 'We trust in you, you trust in us and we go forward' type of thing," he said. "For some, if there's something a little better out there, you break the contract and you pay it."

Up front and honest

Izzo-Brown said she believes multivear contracts are more critical in recruiting, but she concedes they won't stop every coach from leaving for another job.

"It just boils down to talking to kids and making sure that you are up front and honest," she said. "Anything can happen. You can't make promises about how long you're going to be there.

"That's probably one of the most common questions. With my longevity, I think it's a little bit easier for me to say, 'I started this thing, and I haven't moved yet."

WVU volleyball coach Jill Kramer said she sees buyout clauses as a positive in recruiting, especially in her sport, where a majority of the players give verbal commitments early in their high school careers.

"We've got two kids committed who are sophomores who are going to be juniors," Kramer said. "It's important they trust that I am going to be there."

Buyout clauses do not offend her, Kramer said.

"I think what it means is, 'We care about the investment we are making and we want to make sure you are invested in the program and not just yourself," "she said.

"When someone makes a strong investment, I don't see anything wrong with it. It has to be reciprocated both ways."

The Big 12 Conference typically ranks among the top volleyball leagues in the country. Kramer contends that much of that is due to the long-tenured coaches in the league.

"Most of the coaches in the Big 12 have been there well over 10 years," said Kramer, who begins her fifth season at WVU, in August.

"It's kind of like most of them are not going anywhere. That's the situation I'd like to be in. That's kind of how the recruiting game works: You have to be able to tell kids you are situated and building a program they can be proud of."

Using drones would make hunting too easy

I GUESS IT HAD TO HAPPEN.

We've been hearing about UAV's (Unmanned Aerial Vehicles) having the potential to deliver UPS packages to our homes. groceries to our homes, scouting opposition football teams, you name it. And, of course, relative to terrorism and our continuing and escalating war on terror (didn't someone say that we'd won that war?), we hear about drones every day.

If these little devices can do reconnaissance for terrorists, survey leaks on pipelines, monitor traffic around major cities, detect weather, then they obviously can be used to scout and find animals for hunters.

Why bother spending days in the woods finding out where the deer are, looking for deer sign, deer trails, etc., when you can just take a small UAV and find that big buck you've been after? It's the first day of gun season. Should I hunt that ridge, or the one over there? Heck, I'll just send up a drone and find that buck.

If you think that is farfetched, then you haven't been paying attention to the rapid acceleration of technology in the past five years. Within the next two years, drones will become smaller, more advanced. cheaper and more adaptable for specific jobs.

I do not have access to a crystal ball, but look at the way things have advanced in this country.

So, the suggestion that drones could not be developed that would be affordable for hunters to use is not reality.

But is that the way hunters want to go? I don't think so.

Yes, things advance in all areas, from microwaves to cruise control. However, except for a very small minority of misguided people, hunters do not want a guaranteed experience.

If, in some way, every hunt was guaranteed success; if every time a deer hunter went afield he or she would get a huge buck, then except for a few warped fringe, hunters would stop hunting, because hunting is not killing. Ethical hunting is an experience that sometimes ends with a kill, but most times does not.

Think about it in other terms. If every time you went bowling you would get a perfect score of 300 every time — boredom would eventually take over and you would stop bowling. If every time a Mountaineers running back touched the ball, he scored a touchdown, it would be nice at first.

Might be interesting for a game or two. But eventually, no one would bother watching. In fact, nobody would bother playing.

Same is true for making the predator-prey playing field one-sided in favor of the hunter. Doesn't work for me and wouldn't work for you.

Turns out that hunters won't have to decide whether to use drones or not, because states are rapidly passing regulations. Many states have already made their use illegal for hunting. The Pope and Young Club and Boone and Crockett Club have made it illegal to enter animals in the record book if drones were used. The National Park Service just made it illegal to fly drones in national parks. A few states have made it illegal for antihunters to use drones to harass hunters.

It's already illegal to use aircraft to hunt in most states. The only exception I can think of is the use of helicopters to kill unwanted hogs in Texas, where the hogs reached levels that were intolerable for landowners. Since drones are aircraft of sorts, existing laws cover their use in hunting in many states.

It appears that hunting has remedied the growing drone phenomenon. Only time will tell how society deals with them in other areas of our lives.

Poor drafts, big contracts lead to Phillies' fall

Hold last place in the NL East

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — An old, familiar chant is back after a long absence at the Philadelphia Phillies' cozy ballpark. It goes like this: "E-A-G-L-E-S!"

The Phillies are last in the NL East and headed toward their second straight losing season and third in a row missing the postseason. So, fans are turning their attention to the football team.

Cheering for the Eagles during a Phillies' game is the ultimate sign of apathy, a flashback to the way it used to be around here before the baseball team won over the city.

Less than three years removed from a dominant run that featured five straight NL East titles, two pennants and one World Series cham- on Cliff Lee, Jonathan Papionship, the Phillies barely resemble the team that captured the hearts of a sports-crazed town.

Attendance is down, of course. After seven straight seasons of drawing at least 3 million fans, the Phillies are on pace for a half-million drop this year. They had a sellout streak of 257 games — the third-longest in MLB history — between July 7, 2009, and Aug. 6, 2012. Now, empty, blue seats fill the stands.

Several of the star players who led the most successful period in franchise history are still here — Ryan Howard, Chase Utley, Jimmy Rollins. Cole Hamels. Carlos Ruiz. They're getting paid for past performances and each — except Hamels — is well past his prime. That's part of the reason why the Phillies are in this mess.

Thanks to the big contracts general manager Ruben Amaro Jr. gave the stars of '08 and money spent pelbon, A.J. Burnett and Marlon Byrd, they have the highest payroll ($184 million) in club history and third-highest in the majors.

All that produced a 42-53 record before the All-Star break, putting the Phillies 10 games behind Washington and Atlanta. With the non-waiver trade deadline approaching, on July 31, major changes are expected.

The Phillies twice flirted with inching their way into the playoff race by winning five straight games only to fall farther back in the standings.

"Regardless of how we play, they're still going to make their decisions for the future of the team," Rollins said. "I remember back in '05, '06 we started making trades and we started winning. It's like, you take this guy out and you say we're not going to compete this year, but we have the last say in that, and hopefully that is something that's going to happen this year."

Rollins and teammates are clinging to hope they can turn things around. They're ballplayers, so they have to think like that. Reality says it's time for the Phillies to rebuild.

Declining veterans are only part of the problem. Young players haven't stepped up and a dearth of talent in the minors leaves little hope for a quick turnaround.

Domonic Brown was a heralded prospect who finally lived up to expectations in 2013, when he was an All-Star in his first full season as a starter. But he's batting just .227 with six homers and 46 RBIs this year and running out of chances.

Ben Revere doesn't appear to be the center fielder of the future. He's hitting .295, but has a .316 on-base percentage and .670 OPS and is poor defensively.

Third baseman Cody Asche (.254, six homers, 29 RBIs) still has potential to be a middle-of-the-order hitter. But the Phillies need more young hitters to show promise.

baseman/first Third baseman Maikel Franco is the organization's best position player. However, he's hitting only .228 in his first season at Triple-A Lehigh Valley. Two other top prospects — shortstop J.P. Crawford and center fielder Roman Quinn — are only in Single-A Clearwater.

When the Phillies beat Tampa Bay in the 2008 World Series, five regulars and the two top starting pitchers were homegrown talent. Four of them - Utley, Hamels, Pat Burrell and Brett Myers — were firstround picks.

Since Hamels was selected 17th, in 2002, only two of Philadelphia's first-round choices even appeared in a game for the Phillies and both are long gone. Only six of the 13 picks remain in the organization.

Lefty Jesse Biddle, the most-prized of the bunch, has had a disappointing season in Double-A and was recently shut down to get a mental break Though signs point toward a massive overhaul, Amaro is hoping for a quicker fix. "I can't blow this team up for five years and expect us to be [bad] for the next five or six years," he said recently. "I don't think that's the right way to go about it for our fans, our franchise, our organization. I think we owe it to a lot of people, if we do have to go into a transition, it's going to be a shorter one than that.

"There's ways to do it. You have to make shrewd moves, make intelligent moves and try to continue to do that so that the dropoff isn't long term. So if we have to go a step backward for a year or two to move forward, then that's what we'll try to do."

At least fans can look forward to training camp and their beloved Eagles.

Los Angeles Dodgers second baseman Dee Gordon tosses to first base in a failed attempt to throw out the St. Louis Cardinals' Kolten Wong in the first inning Saturday. Gordon was charged with a throwing error and Wong went to second base on the play.

McCarthy beats Reds for 1st win with Yanks

BASEBALL

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Brandon McCarthy's wife had more trouble slogging through Yankee Stadium traffic than he did against the Cincinnati Reds.

McCarthy earned his first win for New York with an impressive debut in pinstripes, and Brett Gardner drove in three runs from the leadoff spot to send the Yankees past the Reds, 7-1, on Saturday.

Told his wife, Amanda, tweeted several wisecracks about all the highway congestion that delayed her arrival at the ballpark, McCarthy could only smile.

"If everybody isn't apprised of what she's doing every few minutes, God knows what would happen?" he said.

Carlos Beltran homered, Kelly Johnson hit a two-run single and the Yankees ended Alfredo Simon's six-game winning streak in the right-hander's first outing since the All-Star game.

Derek Jeter had an RBI single, and New York won the first two in a threegame interleague series, leaving Cincinnati with five straight road losses.

"I think this is kind of a blip in the radar, but we certainly need to turn things around if we want to get that game tomorrow," Reds manager Bryan Price said.

Acquired from Arizona in a July 6 trade, Mc-Carthy (1-0) struck out nine and walked none over six innings in his second start for the Yankees and first at home.

"He's got top-of-the-rotation stuff, and we're really glad to have him," catcher Brian McCann said. "He was doing whatever he wanted to on the mound today."

McCarthy threw 71 of 99 pitches for strikes, improving to 3-0 with a 1.78 ERA in his past four outings. He won only once in his initial 16 starts this season.

"Actually, that was the frustrating part about the beginning part of the season is, I felt sharp," Mc-Carthy said. "I felt like everything was where I wanted it to be. I just wasn't doing everything I needed to to get the best out of it. So I felt like I've thrown better this year than any year in the past, it's just the results haven't followed."

The right-hander was 3-10 with a 4.80 ERA for the Diamondbacks before New York obtained him to upgrade a rotation depleted by injuries to four starters. His first outing for the Yankees was a no-decision, July 9, at Cleveland.

"You realize that you're putting the pinstripes on for the first time, but I try and wash all that away as much as I can and just focus on execution, focus on my routine, what I'm doing. All that stuff I can think about later," Mc-Carthy said.

"I mean, you're pitching for the Yankees, and that's an opportunity no matter what the circumstances are. For me, it's at a point in my career where I want to be challenged. I really want to be in a pennant race. I wanted to be closer to the playoffs. I wanted to be in a market that is difficult. I wanted that kind of stuff to see if I could push myself to the next level, so it's a great opportunity in that sense."

The right-hander allowed four runs — two earned — and five hits in five innings.

Chris Heisev homered for the Reds, struggling to mount much offense this weekend without injured boppers Joey Votto and Brandon Phillips.

Cincinnati has struck out 23 times and walked once in the first two games of the series.

Cardinals 4, Dodgers 2

ST. LOUIS — Matt Adams homered to cap a four-run first inning, and St. Louis beat Los Angeles to send All-Star Zack Greinke to losses in consecutive regular-season starts for the first time in nearly four years.

Joe Kelly (2-1) gave up four hits, struck out four and walked one in his second outing since a threemonth stint on the disabled list caused by a strained left hamstring. He retired his last 13 batters.

Blue Jays 4, Rangers 1

TORONTO — Marcus Stroman (5-2) pitched seven shutout innings to snap a three-start winless streak, Dan Johnson had two RBIs and Toronto beat Texas.

Melky Cabrera had three hits as the Blue Jays won for the first time in four games. Toronto had lost nine of 11 coming in. Stroman allowed four hits, all singles, walked none and struck out five, improving to 4-1 with a 1.73 ERA in six home starts.

Indians 6, Tigers 2

DETROIT — Corey Kluber (10-6) came an out from a complete game, striking out 10 to lift Cleveland past Detroit, in the opener of a day-night doubleheader.

Kluber allowed seven hits — three by Miguel Cabrera — and one walk. He was relieved by Bryan Shaw in the ninth after equaling his career high of 114 pitches.

vincing 11-1, six-inning win in Game 1 of a doubleheader.

Post 2 won Game 2 as well, 6-4, to make it a sweep.

In the bottom of the first in the opener, shortstop Jimmy Galusky hit a leadoff triple and came home on Connor Boyd's grounder. Morgantown stretched out with a fiverun second inning. Tyler Shorter, using a wooden bat, drove in the first two runs, with a double to leftcenter. Boyd and Lucas Trovato drew RBI walks, and Travis Renner ripped an RBI single over short as Post 2 built a 6-0 lead.

"I love that bat," said a beaming Shorter, who went 3-for-4 with two doubles with his BWP Mr. Nasty traditional lumber. "I started using it in St. Louis during our wood bat tournament, and it just felt right. I don't know if using wood is costing me much in terms of distance, but as long as I keep hitting the ball hard and driving in runs, I'm sticking with it."

Limited to 50-75 pitches, Rice was perfect through the first two innings, and limited the damage when Potomac Valley (7-22)turned a pair of singles into its lone run, in the third.

"My curve is usually my best pitch, and it was again today," said Rice, who located his bender in and out and kept the ball down effectively. "I know I was on a pitch count, but my arm felt pretty good, especially after such a long layoff. I could've finished, but all in all it was a pretty good outing." The lead cut to 6-1, Post 2 answered with a pair of runs in the fourth. Renner drove a leadoff double to left center, then trotted home on the second of two wild pitches. Kurt Latocha's two-out single drove in Trovato.

In the fifth, Boyd lined a double to score Galusky again to make it 9-1. Aafter Kyle Seese got through a scoreless sixth, fanning the final hitter to strand a pair, Morgantown (18-14) had a chance to put Game 1 to bed an inning early.

Tristan Lucas got on with an error, Shorter stroked his third hit of the game and Kurt Latocha's hit loaded the bases. Jacob Goodnight's patience was rewarded with an RBI walk, and after Galusky stung a liner right at the left fielder, Boyd lifted a fly ball over the drawn-in outfield for his fourth RBI and the game-winner.

"Jim kept the ball down in the zone, pitched to contact, and threw strikes," Barnette said with a smile. "He did his job, and the defense was solid, and we scored in every inning but one and put the game away early. That's what we wanted, and that's what we needed."

In the second game Saturday, Galusky collected three of Post 2's (19-14) eight hits and scored three runs, and Renner drove in two runs to pace the victory against Potomac Valley (7-23). Ben Taylor and Josh Lemley combined to pitch the win.

Post 2 hosts the annual Alumni game today, at Hawley Field, with batting practice at 1 p.m., the Home Run Derby at 2 p.m. and the first pitch slated for 3 p.m.

Morgantown concludes its regular season at Fairmont on Monday night, then travels to Bridgeport for the Area 2 tournament, beginning Thursday.

Schimmel leads East to victory

WNBA ALL-STARS

Associated Press

PHOENIX — "Showtime" Shoni lived up to her nickname in her first WNBA All-Star Game. And a wild game it was.

Schimmel scored an All-Star game record 29 points and had eight assists as the East pulled out a 125-124 victory against the West on Saturday, in the first WNBA All-Star Game to go into overtime. The Atlanta rookie was named the game's MVP.

Tamika Catchings, an All-Star for a record-tying ninth time, made a layup with 6.9 seconds to go to give the East the lead, then knocked the ball away from Skylar Diggins on the defensive end to seal the victory. Diggins finished with 27 points and seven assists, leading a furious West rally to force overtime.

"They call her 'Showtime' Schimmel," Catchings said. "She came out and put on a great show."

Brittney Griner, of the host Mercury, scored 17 points, including a dunk, for the West.

Schimmel, who grew up on a reservation in the tiny northeast Oregon town of Mission and has a vast Native American following, broke the All-Star Game record of 23 points, set in 2013, by Candice Parker.

Maya Moore scored 24 for the West. Tina Charles had 19, Chiney Ogwumike 15 and Catchings 14 for the East.

Get used to sharing road

Not bicyclists vs. motorists, it's just common courtesy

"Get a bicycle. You will not regret it if you live.' That's how Mark Twain summed up learning to ride a bicycle in an unpublished essay in the early 1880s. More than a century later, not much has changed ... if you go bicycling on area roads.

Still, despite the threat to bicvclists on the road today, it's clear their numbers are coasting upward.

That's despite sweating the hills and the danger around almost every bend in the road. In the past week, we have heard from both sides on the issue of cars sharing the road with bicyclists. For now, there appears to be a double yellow line separating both sides on this issue. Some motorists are clamoring for bicyclists to keep up with traffic, while bicyclists insist they have a right to the road, too.

Obviously, many, make that most, roads in our area are not even wide enough for two vehicles to pass safely. Our topography also prevents drivers from knowing what's over the hill or around the curve.

Not to mention, our state and local governments cannot even afford to maintain existing roads, let alone add bike lanes.

Furthermore, bicyclists seem to some to add just one more challenge – hazard — to driving.

Yet, everyone needs to take a deep breath and simply start learning to share the road with bicyclists, for many good reasons.

The most obvious one is common courtesy. Do unto others as you would have them do unto you, you might say.

There's also a host of statutes in the State Code that spell it out for anyone who questions bicyclists' right to the road.

A new one was even added this year that requires motorists to give bicyclists as wide a berth as possible at least 3 feet — when passing.

And given the overall costs of health care, many of us would be well advised to do some pedaling.

Bicyclists, of course, also need to observe the rules of the road — use signals, stop for signs and lights, don't weave in and out of traffic, and stay off sidewalks.

When possible, make every effort to accommodate passing motorists, too.

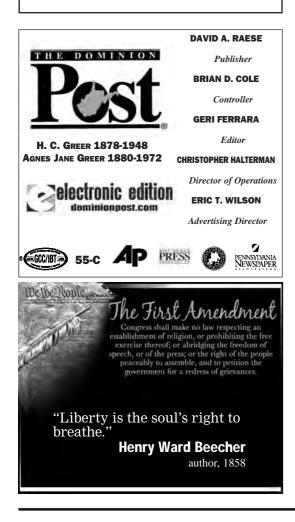

We realize that more education is needed on how motorists and bicyclists need to interact.

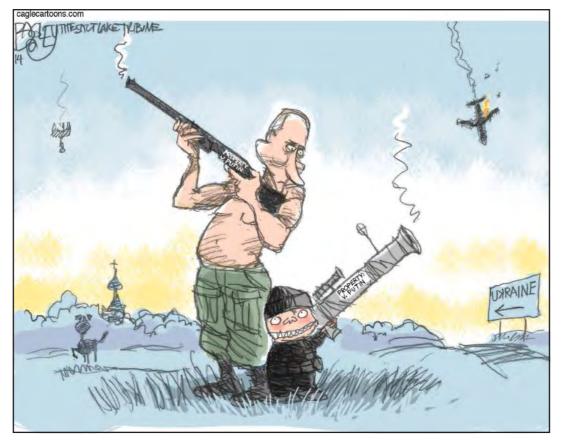

New state road projects also need to at least consider bicyclists in the equation, when cost effective.

In Twain's account, he notes the bike he was learning to ride was one of those cumbersome high-wheeled ones of yesteryear.

Undoubtedly, it took a while to learn how to ride, to get used to.

Learning to share the road with bicyclists might too, but no one will regret it.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Supporting EPA plan good for West Virginia

If West Virginia were not a coal state and dependent on it for much of our electricity, how many people here would think limiting carbon emissions was a good idea? Probably most people.

It's like limiting how much industrial waste goes into rivers upstream from drinking water intakes or how much lead goes into gasoline.

Currently, there are no national limits on how much carbon can leave the stacks of a coal-fired power plant, unlike arsenic or mercury. Right now, coal-fired power plants release 40 percent of all carbon emissions in the country.

The Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) Clean Power Plan proposes to reduce carbon levels leaving these plants by 30 percent by 2030.

This does not mean the end of coal in West Virginia it is a modest step toward placing a limit on something that is impacting our health and the weather.

The EPA proposal allows states to decide for themselves how best to reach these levels, and the requirements for West Virginia are less stringent than for many other states. The proposal sets out four ways to reduce carbon levels:

■ Make coal-fired power plants more efficient.

■ Use more natural gas and other low-carbon emitting fuel sources.

■ Increase use of wind, solar and nuclear energy.

■ Use electricity more efficiently.

If the West Virginia Public Service Commission, and the state Department of Environmental Protection and our politicians work together, this could be a perfect opportunity to increase jobs and improve our health. If we let fear propaganda influence us, we all lose.

chance for West Virginia to lead the rest of the country and show how limiting carbon emissions can benefit everyone. For once, we could be No. 1 for something positive. Tell our politicians that supporting the EPA is good for West Virginia.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH has lost one of its most eloquent voices.

Freedom of Religion is today without one of its truest believers.

Freedom of the Press has one fewer compelling writer — and one of its most-exceptional editors.

And the Right to Petition peaceably for change has one fewer champion to call out to those in power for positive change.

John Seigenthaler, 86, led The Tennessean newspaper in his hometown of Nashville, Tenn., was the first editorial director of USA Today, and was the founder of the Newseum Institute's First Amendment Center.

Seigenthaler died July 11, after being hospitalized briefly. More than 4,000 people lined up for the visitation at the First Amendment Center on July 13, and his funeral was conducted Monday.

During his 40-plus year tenure as a journalist, he more than lived up to the old charge of that profession to "comfort the afflicted and afflict the comfortable."

Whether it was lobbying for long-delayed diplomas for nowaged former students denied graduation because of their civil rights work, or parole and then freedom, rather than the death penalty, for a woman he felt was unjustly sentenced, he worked, advised, strategized and inspired others to demand fairness and action.

He helped integrate Nashville churches by assigning a black reporter for the first time to do The Tennessean's weekly report on Sunday sermons — just one of the many ways he took a larger-thanlife role as editor in opposing bigotry, and pursuing claims of corruption and back-room dealing in local and state government.

History notes that Seigenthaler was knocked unconscious in Montgomery, Ala., while attempting to rescue two Freedom Riders from a Klan-led mob, while serving as a personal representative of President John F. Kennedy and Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

His friendship with Kennedys led to the only real departure from journalism, in the early 1960s during JFK's campaign and later as a top aide to RFK. For decades, he led the selection committees for the John F. Kennedy Library Foundation's Profile in Courage Award and the RFK Center for Justice and Human Rights' Robert F. Kennedy Book Award. John Seigenthaler lived a life dedicated to encouraging the greatest possible number of his fellow citizens to participate in that marketplace and to using their First Amendment freedoms to the fullest. Each year, he'd review the results of the annual State of the First Amendment national survey, showing that most Americans can't name all five freedoms in the First Amendment — and redouble his efforts to raise the score. Just recently, Nashville named a downtown walking bridge across the Cumberland River in Seigenthaler's name — to recognize his work in seeking equality for all, but also to note an incident in which 50 years ago, as a young reporter, he grasped the clothing of a man attempting to jump from the bridge railing — holding him until police rushed up to assist. No doubt many words will be spoken of his many roles as editor, publisher, founder, author, TV host, lecturer, educator and more. But I think he'd be happy if we remembered him with just five: Religion. Press. Speech. Assembly. Petition. And while the customary end for a news story was the proofreader's mark "-30-", I think the more appropriate one for John (based on the number of words in his beloved First Amendment) is this: "-45-"

GUEST COMMENTARY

Exporting LNG to boost energy footing, growth

BY CORKY DE MARCO

Across the country, natural gas development is giving new life to economic recovery and revitalizing entire regions, and West Virginia is no exception.

Our state is fortunate enough to be a part of the two of the richest resource basins in the world, and with an ample supply of natural gas reserves, the current international demand for U.S. natural gas presents an opportunity for West Virginia to obtain increased natural gas investment and stimulate our economy.

The ongoing surge in shale gas production in the United States has turned our nation's long-term energy outlook on its head.

It was only about five years ago when most of the experts were expecting the United States to become one of the largest importers of liquefied natural gas (LNG), the form in which natural gas is shipped overseas.

Now, many of those very same plants that were built to receive LNG are being retrofitted for export and new facilities are on the drawing board.

For energy rich West Virginia, building out of a more expansive natural gas infrastructure would only be a good thing. Energy consultants at IHS estimate that nearly $3 trillion in capital expenditures will take place between 2012 and 2035 in shale natural gas activity — the vast majority of it private capital.

That is private investment that will flow directly into states involved with natural gas extraction, production and shipment.

For example, Dominion Resources Inc. is considering a $2 billion investment in a

The Mountain state has a long history of supplying energy resources to U.S. markets, including natural gas.

450-mile-long natural gas transmission pipeline from West Virginia through Virginia to south-North ern Carolina. It would go into service by the end of 2018 and carproduction from the Marcellus and Utica shale gas fields to market. The construction of this pipeline will mean valuable job creation and state and local tax revenues that we cannot afford to pass up.

The Mountain State has a long history of supplying energy resources to U.S. markets, including natural gas.

As one of the top 10 producers of natural gas in the U.S, producing about 539.9 trillion cubic feet of gas in 2013, taking advantage of an opportunity to expand our markets and in turn bolster this booming industry should be our No. 1 focus.

Understandably, there is a growing chorus of support in Congress to modernize our antiquated regulatory system for LNG exports to reflect the serious shift in our energy landscape.

Later this month, the House will vote on H.R. 6, a bipartisansupported bill that would require the U.S. Department of Energy to approve of liquefied natural gas LNG export applications within 90 days.

Congressional representatives from across the country have been lending their support to this LNG export issue. With only seven applications approved to date and 24 still in the queue, it is imperative that our delegation in Congress stand firmly behind this bill.

The United States is just now in the early stages of a historic transformation to natural gas abundance and long-term energy security. This abundance is fueling an energy and manufacturing surge at home, while providing more than enough surplus for LNG exports.

We need Congress and the White House to move expeditiously to streamline and modernize the regulatory process so we can get on with the work of building out this export capability.

CORKY DEMARCO is the executive director of the West Virginia Oil and Natural Gas Association. This commentary should be considered another point of view and not necessarily the opinion or editorial policy of The Dominion Post.

It's time United States quit on Middle East

The United States should never have gotten involved in the Middle East. It is the killing center of the world in the name of religion.

What's done cannot be undone. The U.S. is involved and must suffer the consequences. After liberating Iraq, it is in jeopardy of falling to a terrorist group, the Islamic State of Iraq and Levant (ISIS). The leader of Iraq didn't want U.S. troops to remain there when the war was declared over.

Now they want our help to oust the terrorist group. What's best for the U.S. is to stay out of the Middle East.

I doubt Iraq is worth the deaths and maiming that occurred during the Iraqi War to American armed forces. It is not worth one American life in the future because it is not in the best interest of the U.S.

Irag's president refuses to include the Sunnis in the government (he is a Shiite). They have been quarrelling for years.

The U.S. has insisted that Sunni representatives be included in the governing process (and rightfully so). Even with the success, thus far, of ISIS in over-running Iraq, he refuses to include Sunni representatives in the governing process. Now he wants help to stem the tide of the success of ISIS

The U.S. needs to get out of the Middle East. The different religions have been killing each other for thousands of years and will more than likely continue to do so for thousands of years.

Why should the U.S. get involved with killing in the name of religion when we have religious freedom in our country? Trying to change conditions in the Middle East is a lost cause.

Too many U.S. servicemen have already died and been maimed in vain.

ELECTION 2014

Nation cannot afford our corporate tax rate

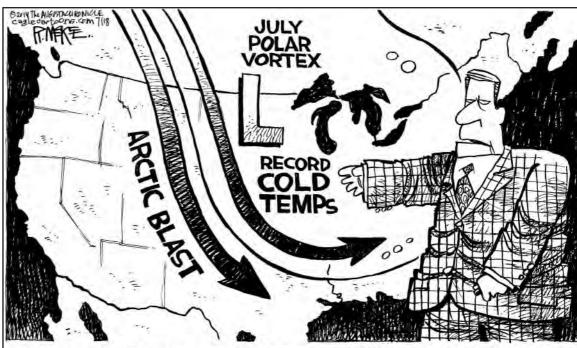

Recently, Heather Bresch, the chief executive of Mylan Pharmaceuticals Inc., announced plans to renounce her company's United States citizenship and instead become a company incorporated in the Netherlands, where the tax rates are lower.

Mylan will continue to pay taxes in the United States on its domestic profits, but not on its business operations abroad

The deal is just the latest example of a so-called inversion. Almost 20 large U.S companies have announced plans to give up their United States citizenship in the past two years.

Many companies are moving to Ireland, which maintains a corporate tax rate of 12.5 percent. This compares to the United States' rate of 35 percent, one of the highest rates in the world.

The Democrats of today would rather have the tax rates as a campaign issue than to do what is right for our economy and citizens.

U.S. companies hold about $3.5 trillion in corporate cash in offshore accounts. The money comes from sales of their products in foreign countries. The companies are keeping the cash abroad because of an insane U.S. tax policy to tax money that has already been taxed where it was earned.

This trend should be a call to action for tax reform in Washington. If this is not dealt with, the nation will most likely continue to lose large employers and taxpayers in droves to countries with lower tax rates.

Our economy has been anemic since President Obama took office. Lowering the corporate tax rate and changing our policy to allow cash generated from business outside of the U.S. to come here tax free would jump start our economy.

When companies leave for lower taxes, the Democrats call them un-American. So in essence, they admit that corporations will act on tax increases just as individuals do.

There used to be Democrats who understood that the only way to increase tax revenues is to reduce rates. President Kennedy stated in 1962, "Lower rates of taxation will stimulate economic activity and so raise the levels of personal and corporate income as to yield within a few years an increased — not a reduced — flow of revenues to the federal government."

would certainly have disapproved. Ahmed stood waiting for me. There was a tension we did not understand. But we were driven by something good that we also did not understand.

We both knew that this second meeting would affirm the first one but probably would be the last. It was truly friendly. We taught each other words from the other's languages, simple words such as "goat," "bicycle" and "rain." We compared notes on siblings.

Before leaving, we spontaneously reached for the same large orange hanging from the tree above us. We peeled it and shared the slices. How sticky and sweet it tasted. We buried the peels and the seeds in the ground under the tree. We promised each other that one day, when peace between our people came, we'd return to see if a tree had taken root and grown there.

I live in California now. In the television footage of the rage coming to us again from that valley, I look for Ahmed's face. We are both middle-aged men now. Several years ago, I visited and found that few trees were left in that valley. Palestinian terrorists have several times set fire to the orchards. Israeli tanks have often rolled into Kalkilya. Unforgivable bombings have killed children in both villages.

I wonder where Ahmed is and what we would say to each other if we were to meet again. Might it be possible for us to reach reconciliation now? Would he remember that we once knew more about peace than the grown-ups on either side of our valley?

Rising to the ChalleNGe in the Mountain State

BY EARL RAY TOMBLIN

Nationwide, the National Guard Youth ChalleNGe program transforms the lives of at-risk youth through training and mentoring, empowering cadets with the confidence they need to succeed and the skills to make positive contributions in their communities. Since the program's inception, in 1998, the successes of its graduating cadets are incredibly impressive.

In 2012, 59 percent of ChalleNGe graduates from across the country received their high school diploma or GED, 45 percent joined the workforce, 41 percent continued their education and 7 percent joined the military.

Since 1998, cadets have donated nearly 8 million hours of community service during the program's 16-year duration; state programs have awarded graduates nearly 69,500 academic credentials, and more than 121,000 teens have graduated.

In West Virginia, the Mountaineer ChalleNGe Academy, supported by the West Virginia National Guard, is transforming the lives of our at-risk youth and helping them to become well-educated, confident and disciplined young men and women.

Located at Camp Dawson, in Kingwood, the Academy leads, trains and mentors our young people as part of a 22-week voluntary residential program and gives them the tools and confidence they need to be successful.

The Mountaineer ChalleNGe Academy program helps cadets develop core life skills including academic excellence, life coping skills, job skills, health and hygiene, responsible citizenship, community service, leadership and physical fitness. Cadets also have access to educational resources to help them get back on track and explore career assessment and interest inventories, participate in job-specific skill orientations and receive training at local vocational centers.

During their time at the Academy, cadets are also paired with a mentor from their community to build an accountability group that will support future plans. Cadets and their mentors share time together off-site — completing community service activities and exploring career and educational opportunities.

These relationships play a critical role in supporting the cadets following graduation and helping them to apply the skills they learned in a real world setting.

Cadets also learn the value and importance of community-needs awareness and giving back, through group and individual service activities including career exploration. This year, the cadets donated more than 5,300 hours of community service to 22 deserving projects in and around Kingwood.

GUEST COMMENTARY

This year, the cadets donated more than 5,300 hours of community service to 22 deserving projects in and around Kingwood.

Through hard work, dedication and perseverance, the cadets of the 42nd graduating class at the Mountaineer ChalleNGe Academy conquered their own personal challenges, worked hard to receive a good education and entered their communities prepared to lead productive and fulfilling lives.

Ninety-six of the cadets passed the high-school equivalency assessment TASC Test, 86 earned a high school diploma and 74 qualified for the Promise scholarship to continue their education.

This year, the state's first lady,

Joanne Jaeger Tomblin, had the privilege to congratulate this year's graduating class of cadets on all of their achievements.

I am incredibly proud of each and every cadet in this year's graduating class, as well as the young men and women who came before them — including cadets such as Michael Suter, of Fairmont.

Before joining the Mountaineer ChalleNGe Academy, he was experimenting with drugs and had dropped out of school.

After graduating from the Academy, in 2013, he earned his high school equivalency, is no longer using drugs and works in his community as a painter. Suter is just one of many former cadets to have shared his success story with members of the Academy staff each year.

These cadets are getting off drugs, working hard to earn their degrees and making a positive difference in the Mountain State.

I salute the West Virginia National Guard, the staff at the Mountaineer ChalleNGe Academy, former and current cadets as well as their families and friends who supported them in their quest to become the best person they can be.

At times, rising to the challenge may have been difficult, but they persevered, and their achievements will serve them well for years to come.

GRADE A

Bigger risk hasn't meant bigger rewards for bond investors this year. Consider junk bonds — those issued by companies at the highest risk of default. They have to offer higher yields than investment-grade bonds to attract investors, but they've nevertheless generated lower returns this year.

To top it off, the Federal Reserve called out junk bonds last week in its monetary policy report to Congress. The central bank said that it sees "signs of excess" after seeing investors pour billions of dollars into junk

TIME TO WORRY?

Investors have had a long list of worries in the last few years, but inflation hasn't been on it. For 18 straight months, inflation didn't rise above 2 percent, as measured by the Consumer Price Index. That is, until last month, when it reached 2.1 percent. Now, more than half the investment managers surveyed by Northern Trust expect inflation to rise over the next six months. The 51 percent rate is up from just 33 percent a quarter ago, and it's

THIS AND THAT

Our 401(k) balances have never been higher and the surging stock market is a big reason for it. But it's important to remember that's not the only one. The average 401(k) account held $91,000 last quarter, up from $80,600 a year earlier, according to Fidelity. The nearly 25 percent return for the Standard & Poor's 500 index drove much of the gains.

But give credit to savers too: They deferred more of their pay, and contributions from accountholders and their employers were responsible for nearly a quarter of the growth of 401(k) balances

InsiderQ&A

Who he is: President of

Discover Student Loans What he says: The most reliable borrowers have succeeded in the classroom

Student debt, which has soared in recent years and now tops $1 trillion in the U.S., is also a new and growing profit driver for Discover Financial Services. The credit card company jump-started its student lending business when it bought Student Loan Corp. from Citigroup in 2010. Discover focuses on private loans, a tiny chunk of the market that studentloan experts say borrowers should take out only after maxing out on government-backed loans.

What's the appeal of the student lending business?

It's an attractive demographic for Discover, a business not a lot of people are in. We're competing with a smaller set of very big competitors: Sallie Mae, Wells Fargo and Discover would be the top three in the space.

Student debt levels are soaring. Should students even be taking out private loans'

The first situation, if you're borrowing, say you're a freshman and you're borrowing unsubsidized Stafford loans, your max is going to be $5,500. So based on all your other forms of aid, if that doesn't cover it, you've got to come up with it somewhere else. Obviously that's one of the places where private loans have traditionally played in the market.

In the last several years, specifically the last two or three, the student lending industry on the private side has introduced fixed-rate products. Last year all of our graduate products had prices that were better than the federal Parent PLUS and Grad PLUS loans, and no origination fees.

I'm not saying that private is right for everyone, but people that have reasonably good credit, they really should put the options side by side. Not just the private competitors, but the federal program, and really look at all the benefits.

What do you encourage borrowers to do?

If you can afford to make a payment while in school, do so.

Successfully completing and being able to repay your loans, we see that driven by students' success in the classroom. If you drop out, it's a pretty tough. We see dramatic differences in loan performance, if you're a dropout versus a graduate.

Should parents make kids take on debt, even if they don't have

There's definitely an argument. You start establishing a credit history. I can see that view. It depends on your personal situation. I personally would probably say if you don't need to borrow, don't borrow.

What's your advice on refinancing private loans?

We launched a pilot program in April in refinance consolidation. There are several players that are now starting to offer some products in that space. We see a lot of people who want to convert from fixed-rate loans to variable.

Bail for charity

Andy Conn, store manager of Wal-Mart 4372, Kingwood, helped raise $10,539.16 for Children's Miracle Network by asking associates and customers to pay his "bail" to get him out of "jail." He made a bet with store associates and promised to wear a dress to their next meeting if they could raise $10,000 or more for the charity. He attended that meeting wearing a full-length red gown with spaghetti straps accessorized with a white hat.

GMS Mine Repair gives safety awards

GMS Mine Repair and Maintenance recently held their annual safety award ceremonies in all regional locations. Numerous award recipients walked away with a variety of prizes, such as 60-inch Samsung televisions and Blu-ray players, while the "platinum winners" drove away in their awards.

George Dunlap and Zach Ewig, both of the GMS North Region, left the ceremony in 2014 Jeep Cherokees, while Mark Cowan, of the Midwest region, rumbled away on a 2014 Harley Davidson 1200 Sportster. Aaron Harner, Robert Cummings and Derrick Williams were winners from the Morgantown office.

Eligible safety award winners are randomly drawn based on a minimum 1,500 hours worked while achieving no lost time accidents or unexcused absences.

The safety awards and ceremony came coupled with the announcement of major workforce development in the Midwest region where GMS has plans to add 150 coal miners by the end of summer including experienced and inexperienced candidates. Additionally, GMS is poised to add as many as 50 miners in the GMS West region in the next 90 days.

Hard-working and safe minded candidates are encouraged to apply in person at any GMS regional office or online at gmsminerepair.com.

Program ACTIVE trains 8 new partners

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Program ACTIVE (Appalachians Coming Together to Increase Vital Exercise), a research study being conducted by Guy Hornsby, associate professor of exercise physiology at WVU, welcomes eight new community partners.

Program ACTIVE is a National Institutes of Health funded research study looking at the best way to treat depression in people with type 2 diabetes. Using a community based research approach, the study recently trained eight area fitness and talk therapy providers in north central West Virginia to offer the study treatment protocol.

Four fitness providers trained were Madeline Hyllberg, from Harrison County YMCA in Clarksburg; Daniel Thomas, from Pro-Performance Rx at Suncrest Towne Centre; and Stephanie Nale and Brittney Rinker, from Fairmont General Health-Plus Fitness Center.

Four cognitive behavioral therapist providers were trained in the talk therapy treatment arm of the study. They are Erika Laurenson and Joann Davis-Frey, from Natural Resilience LLC at Suncrest Towne Centre; Tammy Morgan Hamner, from Hamner Psychological Services in Bridgeport; and Terry Chapman, from Terry L. Chapman LLC of Fairmont.

Program ACTIVE continues partnerships with Tygart Valley Rehabilitation and Fitness Center in Grafton, Rob's Fitness Factory and the WVU Human Performance Lab in Morgantown, and United Summit Center in Fairmont and Grafton.

Program ACTIVE continues to recruit participants into their research study. To qualify, a person must have had type 2 diabetes for at least one year, have been depressed for two weeks or more and be medically stable.

Anyone interested in seeing if they qualify may call 1-855-DMACTIV (1-855-362-2848) or 304-293-7322 to answer several screening questions. If initial qualifying criteria are met, applicants will visit one of the community fitness facilities partnering with the study to do further assessments. At the fitness facility participants do a six minute walk test and have blood drawn to measure A1c, fasting blood glucose and lipids.

At home, participants are asked to answer questionnaires and complete a phone interview about their mood and feelings. The data collected is reviewed by the research team to determine if a person meets criteria to enroll in the study.

WVU Healthcare one of top 20 Most Wired

Submitted to The Dominion Post

By exceeding the benchmarks that earned three consecutive Health Care's Most Wired designations from Hospital & Health Networks magazine, WVU Healthcare is one of only 20 health providers in the nation to take top honors in 2014.

The prestigious annual recognizes health providers at the forefront of using information technology to deliver excellent care. This year, WVU Hospitals was named Most Wired — Advanced, demonstrating that the organization not only met stringent Most Wired standards, but exceeded expectations.

WVU Hospitals is the only West Virginia healthcare organization to make the 2014 Most Wired list.

"When people think of smart tech use in hospitals these days, they generally think of electronic medical records," Rich King, WVU Healthcare vice president and chief information officer, said. "We have extended our reach to make our patients' medical care more personal, convenient, and accessible to them, and that has really helped us stand out from the pack.

"Every time a patient checks wait times through the WVU Urgent Care mobile app, schedules an appointment online, or exchanges emails with their doctor using MyWVUChart, that person is taking an assertive, active role in his or her own care," he said.

Since its inception, more than 50,000 registered users are taking advantage of the website's offerings.

Health Care's Most Wired Advanced status is earned by exceptionally high level of achievement in four key areas: Clinical quality and safety, care continuum, infrastructure and business, and administrative management. The hospitals selected are recognized as true leaders in meaningful use of technology — as information systems improve, so do patient outcomes.

'Afflication' just the latest of her Friday night fails

THERE IS A MOMENT in "The Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers," when Eomer tells our intrepid fellowship, "Do not trust to hope. It has forsaken these lands."

Aside from being quite possibly the nerdiest sentence I have ever written, that is also how I feel pretty much every time I stand in front of a Redbox machine, looking in vain for a halfway decent way to while away my lonely Friday nights.

Home to such cinematic gems as "Ax Giant: The Wrath of Paul Bunyon" and "Joy Ride 3: Roadkill," Redbox is, for the most part, where straight-to-disc movies go to die.

But, as anyone who knows me will tell you, I have little to no life. This goes double on weekends. And as such, I can often be found staring at the screen of one of these contraptions, scrolling through my limited choices, looking up titles I've never heard of before on Rotten Tomatoes on my iPhone. Generally, the news is not good, leaving me to give up, go home, and watch "Orange is the New Black" for the 9,482nd time.

Last week, though, I thought I'd caught a break, when a quick Google of the words "Afflication" and "movie" yielded a solid 87 percent approval rating, and $3\,1/2$ stars on IMDB. So I hit "rent" and headed into Kroger to buy a pint (or three) of ice cream, with which to chase my Swedish Fish.

An hour later, I was ensconced on my sofa, shoving gummy sea life into my grill with far more fervor than my eyeballs were feeling for what was going down onscreen.

In case you haven't heard of it and I'm pretty sure you probably haven't — here's the gist: Two friends take off on a year-long (really? A year?) trip around the world, documenting everything on video and uploading it to social media. Unfortunately for the hapless Derek, a chance encounter with a mysterious (aka French) woman in Paris — a mere 11 days in - leaves him suffering some strange symptoms. Let's see. First, he sleeps for two days straight. Then the sunlight burns his skin. Then he barfs all over a tavern in Italy when he tries to eat a plate of spaghetti. Then he gets really strong. Then he gets really fast. Then his eyes get weird and his teeth seem funny.

Gee, I wonder what could be happening to him? It's all so different and new!

As I'm not afraid of spoiling things for you, Derek is becoming a vampire. Try not to be shocked to death. And here he and his buddy Cliff just thought it was the blood clot on his brain Derek found out he had right before leaving for a year-long trip around the world.

Because, you know, the signs are almost identical.

Until, of course, someone online notices that Derek licks a bit of blood off his hand after a fight, and whoa! It's all so clear now!

Whatever, "Afflicted." Most of the maxi dresses I saw during my save-me-from-this-movie ShopStyle search were scarier than this nonsense.

Turns out that cat Eomer isn't just hot in a nerdy Middle-Earth kind of way. He also apparently shops at Redbox when he's not out patrolling the plains of Rohan, and that's why he has such a pessimistic worldview.

And I wonder why I spend my Friday nights alone eating rubber candy, watching garbage like "Afflication."

trips I've been on in the past, this one was considerably shorter. Ohiopyle lies about 45 minutes to an hour north of Morgantown, and it's pretty easy to get there.

There is a ton of signage to lead you to the right place, and once you're in Ohiopyle, just check out one of the many markers directing you to Frank Lloyd Wright's houses, Fallingwater or Kentuck Knob, or perhaps even just down the road to Cucumber Falls. But more on that later.

To begin my day, I wanted to find some folks who were headed out to do the signature Ohiopyle activitv: Whitewater rafting.

Call it great timing or whatever, but the moment I pulled into the parking lot, I spotted a group of rafters about to head out on the Yough.

Whitewater on the Yough

Numerous rafting companies send riders through the rapids of the Yough, but the ones I ran into were some of the folks from the Laurel Highlands River Tours & Outdoor Center.

Justin Samples, of Morgantown, greeted me and happily filled me in on the company's rafting opportunities.

The Yough has rapids for every level — from Class I and II, the easiest, to Class IV and V, the most advanced.

The trips themselves range in price from $50 to $150, depending on the length and level of the rapids.

On this particular Friday, hundreds of people loaded up into the rafts, pushing out into the Yough just below the parking area on the lower side of the main falls of Ohiopyle. Depending on what experience level trip you're on, your put-in point could vary.

And while I didn't head out on the rapids myself that day — I rafted the Cheat River last year for a story — I plan to return to Ohiopyle for a trip down the Yough sometime soon

Good eats and shopping treats

After talking with the Laurel Highlands River Tours folks and waving at the rafters as they started on their journey down the river, I decided it was time for lunch.

I'd been to Ohiopyle once before, and I'd eaten at this little outdoor barbecue joint, so I decided to head back there.

This standalone barbecue place is located right next to Firefly Chocolates in the center of town. It offers some awesome barbecue, including my favorite, pulled pork, and then you've got to have some fresh-cut fries on the side. If you don't mind some extra calories, you can also pile some bacon, cheese and ranch on those potatoes for even more flavor.

Firefly Chocolates? Well, let's just say if you're in the mood for everything from chocolate-covered strawberries to peanut butter cups, you've come to the right place.

Just down the road, I met the owners of Ohiopyle Bakery & Sandwich Shoppe and Paddler's Pizza, Julia and Rob Joseph. The couple moved to Ohiopyle several years ago because they liked the small-town feel of it. In fact, Rob said only about 10 percent of their business comes from locals; the other 90 percent is tourists.

"The summertimes are fantastic, busy all the time," he said.

"I would say that no matter who is coming in, they leave as a friend. We have lots of new friends from all over because it's a really nice area," Julia said.

The bakery offers sandwiches, pepperoni rolls and other items, such as my favorite, cookies. The snickerdoodles were awesome, by the way. Paddler's Pizza is right next door and has plenty of room for you to sit and enjoy a big pie before or after your adventurous day at Ohiopyle.

If there's one thing this area should be known for, outside of its variety of activities, it's the restaurants. And while I couldn't possibly visit all of them, I encourage you to try them because I've heard nothing but good things about the food in this small town.

The main falls

Belly full and ready for some adventure, I decided to walk around town a little bit, passing by the general store (famous for its ice cream), the old train station (which sits alongside a nice biking trail), and some swimmers and picnickers above the main falls area.

The large falls at the park is impressive and picturesque, and you can picnic by them, enjoy the site from the overlook, hike the woods on the other side of the river, or take a look around the new visitor's center, which is scheduled

At the main falls, I met Jeff and Kelly Rafferty of Fredericktown, Ohio, who were visiting just to enjoy the day in the outdoors.

"We came down to look at the falls and walk around the peninsula, and see the beauty and all the trees and do some shopping, of course," she said.

"Not him," she pointed to Jeff, "but me." "She shops, I wait," Jeff added good-naturedly.

Adventure park

As I was getting ready to drive out of the main part of town, I ended up driving by the Laurel Highland's River Tours & Outdoor Center's zip-line adventure park, and I decided to stop by.

Nolan Glisan, one of the guides, was hanging out with a few others by the course, and he was nice enough to explain all about the adventure park.

There are two levels at the park: Explorer and adventure. The explorer level offers three obstacles, 15 feet in the air, finished off with a 90-foot-long zip-line ride. The adventure level has six obstacles at 30 feet in the air, and it offers a 200-foot zipline ride. The explorer level is $20-$24, and the adventure level is $34-$44.

Glisan said you don't have to make a reservation, but it helps because summertime in Ohiopyle can be quite busy. He would know. He's lived there his entire life.

"It's a really small town. The locals are great people, and it gets really busy with tourists. It's kind of hard to park around Ohiopyle. They need to work on their parking, but it's a lot of fun. There's lots of things to do," he said. "It's a great way to spend a weekend."

One of his favorite places is Cucumber Falls, which I decided to make my last stop on the way out of town.

Cucumber Falls "Cucumber's a great time," Glisan said. "We have natural waterslides, which are a lot of fun ...

He was right. Even though I didn't have a Water reaches the edge of the rocks at Cucumber Falls,

■ Take some extra ones and change with you, as Pa. 43 is a toll road.

- Take the time to walk to the bottom of Cucumber Falls. It's not that far, and if you're wearing a bathing suit, you can even go for a swim or hang out behind the waterfall.
- Make any reservations ahead of time. This goes without saying for a whitewater rafting trip, but it's also a good idea if you want to try out the zip-line adventure course. You don't necessarily need to organize your plans ahead of time, but it will guarantee you a spot on the obstacle course.

- Eat in Ohiopyle. Make sure you save your appetite for the great eats you can find in this small town.
- Take a bike with you. While Ohiopyle is known for whitewater, the bike trail offers riders a quiet, nature-filled ride that you can make as long or as short as you want.

bathing suit with me, the short hike from the small parking lot to Cucumber Falls was well worth it.

From the overlook at the top, the first thing I noticed was all the folks swimming in the hole at the bottom of the 30-foot falls. On my left was a short trail leading toward the rushing water, so I decided to take it, and I ended up stepping out onto the rock at the top of the falls, looking straight down at the swimmers below.

Since I'd been at the top of the waterfall, I decided to hike down to the bottom next. It only took me about five minutes to meander down the trail, and I climbed out as far as I could out on the wet rocks without falling into the water. It was then I noticed there was a whole cavern behind the waterfall where people could hang out. The beauty that is Cucumber Falls capped off an already terrific day at Ohiopyle and reminded me we can definitely have the best of both worlds: Good food and outdoor fun. On my short drive back to town, I pondered my return to Ohiopyle, especially Cucumber Falls, with a car load of people. And maybe this time, I might just let myself fall into the water.

Netflix cuts costs, ends its Saturday shipments

BY SALVADOR RODRIGUEZ Los Angeles Times (MCT)

Netflix has quietly stopped sending Saturday shipments to customers of its DVD subscription service, a move that could save the company 10 percent annually on shipping costs, one analyst estimates.

Last year the U.S. Postal Service considered ending Saturday mail delivery, leading to a report that said the change could make Netflix more profitable. Ultimately, the USPS backed off its plan to end Saturday deliveries, but Netflix has gone through with it.

The Los Gatos, Calif.,

company's shipment change was first noticed by a customer who alerted other Netflix subscribers on Movie Fans, an online community of Netflix users.

"I learned of this change while speaking to Netflix Customer Service about a problem with their website. They told me that Saturday deliveries were discontinued," the customer wrote.

The company did not respond to a request for comment, but it has confirmed the change through one of its online pages, which says the company only ships DVDs Monday-Friday, excluding holidays.

Route 91 Harvest music fest set for Vegas

Associated Press

LAS VEGAS - A country music extravaganza featuring some of the biggest names in the genre will descend on Las Vegas this fall, taking a cue from the massive rock, pop, electronic dance music and indie festivals that have recently made Sin City home.

Concert producer Live Nation and casino company MGM Resorts International announced recently that they're collaborating on the inaugural, three-day Route 91 Harvest festival, set to take place Oct. 3-5 in an empty lot near the Mandalay Bay resort.

"We're not kidding around. We have to go for it," said Brian O'Connell, president of Live Nation's country touring division and producer of similar festivals in Washington state and Michigan. "In order for us to stand up and be noticed (in Las Vegas), we have to put together a spectacular show." The event, which uses the historical name of present-day Las Vegas Boulevard, will include country A-listers Jason Aldean, Miranda Lambert, Blake Shelton, Dierks Bentley and Brantley Gilbert. Others on the roster include Dwight Yoakam, Randy Houser and Dustin Lynch. Three-day passes start at $169 and go on sale Aug. 1. The event is the latest large festival to launch in or move to Las Vegas in recent years. The city is already host of the Electric Daisy Carnival rave in June, the Life is Beautiful festival in downtown Las Vegas in late October, and the iHeartRadio Music Festival, produced by radio giant Clear Channel in September.

The inaugural Rock in Rio USA event, modeled afmega-festival launched in Brazil, is scheduled for May 2015.

'Mountain Monsters' show a reminder of college antics

THE LOWER-CLASSMEN had never gone snipe hunting.

Darkness had fallen over Canaan Valley Resort, and two of my guy friends and I had a plan that was too tempting not to pursue. My senior year in college, a group of my fellow students were at the resort for a retreat, and there were some, shall I say gullible? ones among the bunch.

Thus, we starting spinning the tales of the snipe, a platypus-like creature or was it a duck-like bird? — that only came out at night and liked to hide in the woods. My two friends disappeared covertly into the dark forest as I rounded up the others for our little adventure. Armed with only our wits, we traipsed off in search of the little creatures.

While my one friend, being monkey-like in his younger years, decided to climb a tree, the other hid under his coat, peering out through the mesh backing to look for the incoming students.

Well, you can probably see where this was going, as you can imagine the antics a group of college-age kids could get into in the forest at night. Let's just say, we scared them enough to create a racket that drew the attention of the park ranger.

Looking back, it probably wasn't the smartest thing we've ever done, but it sure was a heck of a good time. And hey, it was college, what can I say?

That was a story that came to mind as I tried to think up the reasons why I started watching "Mountain Monsters." The Destination America reality show follows a group of six native West Virginian hunters and trappers as they try to find legendary creatures roaming the Appalachian Mountains, such as the Mothman, the Shadow Creature or Hogzilla.

Sure, the monsters they're chasing are probably about as real as those snipes we were after in Canaan — by the way, there really is a shorebird known as the snipe — but it's fun to watch these serious mountain men wander familiar hills and hollers in the middle of the night looking for Bigfootlike creatures.

And don't say they never caught anything: Just the other night, the Hogzilla episode ended up with a huge wild pig in the trap. It had supposedly been terrifying the locals.

Most of the time though, the monster determines a way out of the trap, whether it be clawing through it, avoiding it in some roundabout way, or outsmarting them by stealing the bait without setting it off. And that's just as well. I'm not sure what viewers expect anyway. If these folks really did find a monster, don't you think photos of it would be plastered all over the news first? But I digress.

The show is pure entertainment, and the guys are down to earth, fun and surprisingly well-spoken for rugged mountain men. In fact, their mannerisms and accents are so familiar to me, they could be the guys next door or relatives at the family reunion. In fact, I'd actually love to meet them in person and even go out with them on one of their monster

That's likely the collegeage me talking. Of course, these days I'd probably be on the more gullible side of things. But, hey, I'm always up for a good snipe or monster — hunt.

"Mountain Monsters" airs at 10 p.m. Fridays on Destination America.

Adding pet amenities a rising trend

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES These homes are set apart by their amenities — for dogs.

Standard Pacific Homes is building and selling homes in 190 developments from Florida to California and is believed to be the first to offer a pet suite as an option in every one.

The most lavish suite is a 170-square-foot pet paradise with a step-in wash station, handheld sprayer and leash lead; tile walls and floors; a designated drying area with a commercial sized pet dryer; a water station; automated feeders; a large bunk-style bed; cabinets for toys, treats and food; a stackable washer and dryer; a French door that opens to a puppy run; and a flat-screen televi-

Standard Pacific, based in Irvine, decided to offer pet suites after conducting livability studies with homeowners. Pets were a constant theme, said Jeffrey Lake, vice president and national director of architecture for Standard Pacific.

"Devotion to pets is second-to-none," he added. "They are family."

The American Pet Products Association reports that 68 percent of Americans own pets and contribute to an industry worth more than $55 billion annually.

Real estate officials say building homes designed to cater to pets is a new concept, but that remodels for pet owners have been available for some time.

Adam Cowherd Construction in Ozark, Missouri, installs pet-friendly additions to homes. Cowherd said he recently finished a job where there was an open shelf on the end of a kitchen island to hold pet bowls.

"Owners want uniquely functional, very contemporary and something that catches the eye," Cowherd said.

However, only once in the last 10 years has he been asked to build a whole room for a pet, he added.

Melanie Dean lives with her family near Dallas in a Standard Pacific home with a pet package for their dog, Lola.

Lola's room "makes life much easier," Dean said. "We don't have to use the kitchen sink to wash yucky stuff anymore."

Standard Pacific Homes' newest community, called Avignon at Blackstone in Brea, about 25 miles south of Los Angeles, features homes that start at $1.3 million. The pet spa option adds $35,000 to the price, Lake said.

Nordstrom ads feature models with disabilities

NEW YORK — It's not easy to find models with disabilities in ads for the fashion and beauty industry — unless you look in the Nordstrom catalog.

The company has been using models with disabilities since 1997 and continues the tradition in its annual July catalog, which kicks off the upscale retailer's largest event of the year with preview discounts of new fashions for fall.

This summer's Nordstrom Inc. catalog includes among others a woman in a wheelchair modeling boots and a man with a prosthetic leg modeling Nike running shoes.

professional Hiring models with disabilities has become so much a part of the Seattle-based company's DNA that its regular customers may not even realize how unusual it is.

"Identifying companies that utilize models or actresses with disabilities has been like finding a needle in a haystack," said Meg O'Connell, a partner at the consulting firm Global Disability Inclusion.

Nordstrom, she added,

"is a leader in this space and has been a long-standing supporter of disability inclusion not only in their advertising but also in employment and accessibility in their stores."

The clothing that Nordstrom models wear is not adapted in any way. The model wearing Nikes has one on his foot and the other on his prosthetic device. The model in the wheelchair has short spiky hair as part of the punk look of her outfit, which includes a dark leather jacket along with the featured sale item, short boots with a buckled strap.

Preventatives would slash the incidence of heartworm

PETS CAN RUN. but they can't hide from heartworm disease, which occurs in all 50 states. Without heartworm protection, even indoor cats hiding under the bed or dogs in states where heartworm isn't especially common (like California or Nebraska) aren't safe from this potentially fatal disease.

Heartworm's increasing prevalence is complicated to trace. The fact that 1) heartworm is spread by several mosquito species and 2) mosquitoes seem to be increasing in numbers tells only a part of the story. Dr. Stephen Jones, Moncks Corner, S.C.-based president of the American Heartworm Society, explains that coyotes are carriers for heartworm, and their numbers are climbing in many areas.

Dogs stricken with heartworm can also serve as carriers. Animal shelters and rescue organizations increasingly re-locate dogs to facilities several states away, where adoption possibilities are greater. Alas, "these dogs aren't always tested first for heartworm. Even if they are tested, sometimes it takes several tests to rule out heartworm, and there are cost limitations (to consider)," explained Dr. Robert Stannard, a board member of the American Heartworm Society "So, heart-worm is spread." To be clear, heartworm is in not contagious from animal to animal. Mosquitoes bite an infected wild canine species (such as coyotes), infected dogs or infected raccoons and then pass the "baby larvae" to other animals, including unprotected dogs, cats or ferrets not on a heartworm preventative.

"In dogs, heartworms can be up to about a foot-long and live in the pulmonary arteries and heart for over five years," Jones noted.

While heartworm disease in dogs can be treated, such care is expensive.

"Certainly, treatment is work by Jones reveals that even if the heartworm treatment appears successful, the disease can leave permanent damage in dogs.

"Because the damage is inside the dog, we don't see it. Some dogs (are) never the same again," Stannard said.

A part of the problem is that if pet owners and even veterinarians aren't seeing mosquitoes where they live, and there aren't many reports of heartworm, dog and cat owners become careless. The problem "may be human nature, but pets pay the price," Jones said.

Stannard said he's been guilty himself, as his practice is in Livermore, Calif., an arid area where mosquitoes aren't a big issue. Ten years ago, he began testing cats for heartworm disease. Much to his surprise, that first year 16 cats tested positive, and a total of 39 cats since 2004. The majority that tested positive were indoor cats.

"There's no treatment for heartworm disease in cats," Stannard noted.

It was only recently discovered that heartworm disease occurs about as often in cats as in dogs. The good news is, cats are sometimes able to fight off the disease with no apparent symptoms. Some cats do suffer from heartworm-associated respiratory disease (which mimics asthma), which can be treated, but respiratory disease in cats can impact their quality of life. In still other cats, the only symptom is sudden death.

"Whether we're talking dogs or cats, there is a solution: Prevention," Jones said.

The American Heartworm Society estimates that 100,000 dogs are infected with heartworm annually. The number of cats infected is unknown. While no one knows how many dogs and cats die of heartworm, Stannard says that if 90 percent of dogs and cats were on a preventative, heartworm deaths would be rare. It's that simple.

How prepared are you for storms?

If you're asking yourself the same question, there are some things we can do to help keep ourselves and family safe when the weather takes an unexpected

First, create a basic emergency kit for your home. Some basic items to include are: Nonperishable food and water (one gallon per person) for up to three days, a can opener, moist towelettes, battery-powered or hand-crank radio, batteries, duct tape, flashlights, blankets or sleeping bag, cell phone, whistle and first-aid kit. If you have pets, make sure you have enough food, water and supplies for them. Most importantly, if you take medication on a regular basis, make sure you have a supply on hand. At least every six months go through your emergency kit and replace any items that may have expired.

Some items that you may want to keep in your car include: Blankets, flashlight and batteries (or a hand crank flashlight), food containing protein (nuts and energy bars) and water, a shovel, cat litter for traction in the winter and extra warm clothes, hats, gloves and more. Things to include in the plan are: How you will contact one another, where to meet if you're not together and what you will do in different situations. Update contact information as things change and notify others, babysitters or caregivers, about your plan. It would be a good idea to practice your plan periodically so everyone is clear and remembers what to do.

Singles: God is still in your corner

Q: I notice that organized religion is aimed at families and married couples. It seems as if children are an integral part of the church and people with children are provided with many more opportunities to interact with each other than childless people.

I'm in my 50s and have had several serious relationships but they've all fallen apart before marriage. The older I get, the harder it seems to be to meet potential partners. I've met two of my partners through church, but I don't see many single men attending at this point.

I have friends, a good job and family nearby, and I'm active in my community, but I feel empty without a partner to share my life. I know I'm not the only person finding life difficult to navigate alone. Many of mv friends are also single. We grew up hearing Matthew 19:5 about leaving our father and mother and uniting with a spouse. I assumed this was God's plan for all of us. If so, why are there so many single people looking for someone special and why can't we seem to find each other?

I know I don't fully understand God's plan for me and can't always see the big picture, but why would He want me to go through life alone? -- An Old Maid (please do not use my name or initials)

A: I'm deeply saddened but not surprised by your painful but spiritually insightful agony. You're absolutely right that organized religion and its institutions are primarily constructed to care for the spiritual needs of married couples and their children. Single people are often overlooked.

The historical reason for this spiritual lacuna is obvious. Religions were formed long before adolescence became a large social force. By adolescence, I don't mean the teenage years, although quite often a person's drift away from organized religion begins then. I mean the period of time between puberty and

Until the modern era. that period of time in a person's life was brief or non-existent. People began learning a trade and working, and were often married off in their early teenage years. Most died before reaching what we now call middle age. The major faiths developed rituals and institutions to meet the needs of the only people they knew--adults and children.

Look at all the holiday celebrations and you'll see they have rich and varied roles for married adults and children but little or nothing for single adults.

Easter and Passover come to mind. Family dinners and children's activities festoon these holidays and give both parents and children much to do and much to anticipate. Alas, Easter egg hunts and searching for the hidden matzah are not big draws for people who don't have families of their own and don't want to elbow out the kids on their way to finding the chocolate eggs.

With the advent of extended training for adult work and romantic love as the reason for marriage, it's not unusual today for people to still be completing their education well into their 30s. These days, the period between puberty and marriage can last two decades or more.

Of course, churches, synagogues and other religious institutions have tried to create new ways to cover the adolescence gap. Singles services and social events help, but they can seem artificial and contrived to many people seeking to connect to each other and to God. Religious-based on line dating sites work for some.

The Jewish community has had success sending Jewish adolescents on group trips to Israel through the Birthright program. I would also mention for praise the Mormon year of service, which provides both spiritual connection and service uniquely suited to those who are not children and not married.

As to your frustration at not finding a soul mate, let me urge you to have patience and devote your free time to social service. The best way to find a mate with good values and spiritual roots is to go to places where people like that are doing good things. They find each other by finding God in the eyes of a hungry child or a homeless veteran. You are surely one of them.

High heels can lead to serious problems down the road Q: I have had it with KEVIN my chiropractor badgering me about high heels. I like to wear them. Do you agree that they are causing my back pain? A: Your feet are the foundation on which everything else rests. They're under considerable pressure carrying the weight of your body. One way to care for them and for your knees, hips, to avoid high heels.

spine, back and neck — is

Podiatrists, doctors who specialize in foot care, have long warned of the dangers of high heels. Chiropractors have also weighed in. They recommend that women wear heels that are no more than two inches high, and if a woman must wear high heels, they suggest she should do so for no more than two hours a day.

High heels stress the foot's weight-bearing function. This can strain muscles in the legs and back. Muscles that are working abnormally can pull things out of line. Wearing high heels for any length of time also accentuates the normal forward curve of the back and makes the pelvis tip forward. This alters the normal configuration of the pelvis and spine necessary for the body to maintain a center of gravity.

If the habit of wearing high heels exists for many years, the body becomes shaped to accommodate these unnatural postural changes, and permanent and damaging biomechanical changes occur and become early onset of degenerative changes (arthritis). This leads to chronically painful joints of the legs and spine, and it is very difficult or impossible to reverse if left too long.

Women who go for chiropractic treatment often don't recognize the relationship between the shoes and the ailment for which they've sought treatment. Talk with your chiropractor about the appropriate shoes to wear for your lifestyle ... I think he or she is probably doing you a favor by bugging you about it.

Kingwood class of 1964

On July 4, 37 classmates and their guests gathered for a reunion of the Kingwood High School class of 1964, at the home of Chuck and Dorotha Calvert Stanton on Elsey Creek Lane in Albright. Building Beauty

Styles of Architecture

As you walk through a city, you might notice that every block has a different feel. The types of buildings can make each part of a city feel like a separate world. Different building designs, or architecture (AR-ki-tekchur), create a different mood.

The Mini Page talked with an architectural historian from the Savannah College of Art and Design to learn more about some of the main architectural styles.

Classical

Thousands of years ago, ancient Greeks designed buildings so beautiful that people are still modeling buildings after them today. Ancient Romans based their own architecture on ideas they learned from the Greeks.

The architecture style of ancient Greece and Rome is known as classical. Greek and Roman architecture had clean, simple lines.

The design elements, or features, in their buildings have become a kind of architectural alphabet. Architects through time have built their own designs using this classical alphabet.

Some of the most admired elements are the massive stone columns that help support Greek buildings.

Column sculpture

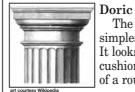

Each column is a piece of sculpture. Grooves often run up and down the columns. The grooves thicken or thin in special patterns. Decorating with grooves is called fluting.

The columns themselves were spaced in a strict pattern. The Greeks had rules for the column design and spacing. For example, the space between each column was slightly wider than the column itself.

Three patterns

The Greeks created three different styles of columns: the Doric (DOR-ic), Ionic (eve-AHN-ik) and Corinthian (kuh-RIN-thee-uhn). Each style was decorated differently at the top, or capital, of the column. "Capital" comes from the Latin word for "head."

Column styles

The Doric is the simplest capital style. It looks like a square cushion sitting on top

The Ionic capital looks like a square cushion with a curving spiral on each side.

Corinthian Corinthian is the fanciest style. Its capital has sides that flare out. Sculptured

Maria Sharapova

It's shaping up to be an eventful 2014 for tennis player Maria Sharapova. In February, she participated as a torchbearer in the opening ceremonies of the Winter Olympics held in Sochi, Russia. It was a homecoming for Maria, since she and her family had lived in Sochi when she was a child, before moving to the United States. Another thrill came on the tennis court in June, when she captured the women's singles title of the 2014 French Open, one of the sport's four Grand Slam events, along with the Australian Open, Wimbledon and the U.S. Open. In her once, along with an Olympic silver medal in London in 2012. It was Maria's third straight appearance in the finals of the French Open, and her second title there in three years It's a remarkable accomplishment for this former No. 1 player in the world, who has enjoyed success on and off the court for the past decade

Growing From the Classical

Ancient Rome

Ancient Romans added arches and domes to buildings. They played with shapes, creating circular and oval buildings as well as rectangles.

Romans were more interested in what buildings looked like from the inside than from the outside. Ceilings were high and vaulted, or formed with arches.

They decorated floors and walls with mosaics (mo-ZAY-iks). Mosaics are pictures and designs made of small pieces of colored stone, tiles or Colosseum (kal-uh-SEE-uhm) allowed people to see and hear no matter where their seats were. Many modern sports stadiums use the same design.

Minarets surround the Hagia Sophia museum in Istanbul, Turkey.

Eastern styles

The Byzantine (BIZ-uhn-teen) Empire covered much of what is now Eastern Europe and Turkey for about 1,000 years, until 1450 A.D. For a long time, it was part of the Roman Empire. Its architectural style was influenced by the Romans.

Byzantine architecture is known for its huge circular domes. Buildings were decorated with mosaics.

Arab and Islamic buildings were influenced by Byzantine style. They are known for their minarets (min-uh-RETS), or tall, thin towers reaching into the sky.

Into the Middle Ages In the late 300s and 400s, northern tribes called Goths invaded the Roman Empire. These raiders destroyed much of the art, buildings and literature in their path. The centuries after the invasions were known as the Dark Ages. Little art or architecture was created then.

After several hundred years, around 1000, people began to rebuild. Longing for a return to the past glories of the Roman Empire, they brought back classic styles. This return to classical is called Romanesque. Romanesque looked like super-powered classical Roman architecture. Buildings such as Vézelay Abbey in France had higher ceilings with taller vaulted arches. Arches were more complicated.

Designing With Light

Gothic

Decorative Romanesqe styles grew even more focused on splendor, growing into what is now known as Gothic architecture. It is known for its height, light and color.

Around the 1100s, architects discovered they could make even taller arches by making them pointed at the top. Ceilings were built higher than ever.

Using pointed arches allowed architects to reduce the amount of wall space and fill it with glass, especially colorful stained glass. Some churches were basically made with walls of glass. Stained glass often pictured religious stories.

Support from the outside

In order to help support the mostly glass walls of Gothic cathedrals, architects built arches on the outside of the buildings. These supporting arches are known as flying buttresses (BUH-tris-ehz).

Flying buttresses add support to the walls of the Washington (D.C.) National Cathedral.

Rose windows

A special kind of stained glass window, the rose window, was shaped like a rose, a symbol of the Virgin Mary. Rose windows are often a centerpiece of Gothic cathedrals.

This rose window is in Sainte Chapelle

Next week, The Mini Page continues its exploration of architectural styles.

Gargoyles

Today, when we think of Gothic cathedrals, we often think of the weird, spooky sculptures, or gargoyles (GAR-goils), that loom over buildings. Gargoyles acted as rain spouts, carrying water away from the building.

Gothic architecture did not get its name until after the 1300s. As an insult, a group of Italian artists labeled this architecture after the invading Goths of centuries before. The Gothic revival in the 1800s was sometimes a rebellion against the rules of society. Today "gothic" often means something creepy.

Terms of endearment for ex can be misleading

Q: I've been dating a woman with a little girl for over a year now. She split with her ex right after she accidentally became pregnant. The baby was only 6-7 months old when we began dating. The two of them live with me in my house, and marriage has been discussed in depth.

The problem lies in her boundaries. Although her ex has had drug issues and has made some very bad choices and she tells me he's not marriage material, she attempts to remain friendly with him for the benefit of their daughter. He occasionally joins her on play dates to the park, things like that.

Here's the problem: Several months ago I discovered that he was texting her details about his day. Her responses were cordial, but also included the words, "hon" or "honey." I asked her about it, and at first she tried to explain it away, but after I pointed out various things, she acknowledged that she was in the wrong and knew that it hurt me, but she would be unable to say it wouldn't happen again. She claims to want to marry me and says she'll always put me first in her life. What's good ex-etiquette?

A: It appears your girlfriend chooses to uses, these terms of endearment and she has made it very clear that she intends to continue — so the ball is actually in your court.

You have to decide if her behavior is a deal breaker. I refer you to Good Ex-Etiquette for Dating rule No. 4, "Establish clear boundaries. (Know your deal breakers.)" In other words, it's not her boundaries that are in question, it's yours.

Do I think her behavior is inappropriate? Personally, I do — and it could be regarded as her playing games, which breaks another ex-etiquette rule, No. 8, "Be honest and straightforward."

Technically, she's not being dishonest with you, but it certainly sounds as if she's being dishonest with her ex. Calling her child's father "honey" or "hon" implies familiarity and may give the father false hope of a reconciliation — and if the child overhears it, may also give her false hope. Good ex-etiquette dictates, "cordial, not cuddly."

Your girlfriend may have a motive in all this. It's not uncommon for people in her position to think that if they make the father or mother of their child feel special that it will prevent any problems when exchanging the child or requesting extra time. But it still remains that after you discredited her excuses as to why she was doing it, she finally owned up, said it was wrong, but couldn't guarantee she wouldn't do it again. That's concerning and indicates it's a choice, and that she's fully aware of what's she's

I suggest she take a good look at her motives, and out of respect for you, her ex, and her child, stop the terms of endearment because they are misleading — unless that's the feeling she wants to convey. If that's the case, then both of you must examine

Sounds like she's making a conscious choice: Intellectually she knows he's no good, but she can't quite get him out of her system. Those feelings could severely affect your marriage if you do actually marry. Both of you have some soul searching to do before the "I do's."

Unraveling the lexicon of Realtors

Every industry has their own terminology or lingo. Often the people in that industry speak it as if it is second nature. We sometimes fail to realize that our customer or client may not understand what we are talking about. I personally thought about this as I read a blog this week from "The Front Porch." I wanted to educate readers about some of the verbiage Realtors use every day.

- Addendum These are the additional documents that go into a real estate contract.
- Appraisal This is how a loan officer determines if the property is worth as much (or as little) as the buyer is willing to pay for it.
- Closing This is the date that the buyer's purchase will be recorded at the County Courthouse and become their property.
- Closing costs All of the expenses paid by the buyer and the seller when the real estate deal closes. These can include the brokerage commission, mortgage-related fees, escrow or attorney's settlement charges, transfer taxes, recording fees, title insurance and so on.
- Commission This is the amount the real estate agent makes from the sale. It is usually a percentage.
- Contingency This is a condition that has to be fulfilled in order for another event to happen. Example: The purchase of the home is contingent upon the buyer obtaining a loan or getting a home inspection.
- Earnest money This is deposit put down by the buyer to legitimize the contract that will be held in a trust account by the seller's real estate brokerage until closing. Then it will be disbursed to the seller and credited toward the buyer's purchase price.
- Escrow This is the financial instrument held by a third party on behalf of the other two parties in a transaction. The funds are held by the escrow service until it receives the appropriate written or oral instructions or until obligations have been fulfilled. Example: If the home being sold is vacant and it has a septic system that cannot be tested, a third party will hold a specific amount of money in escrow until it is ensured the septic system works properly.
- Foreclosure The process of taking possession of a mortgaged property as a result of someone's failure to keep up mortgage payments.
- MLS this stands for Multiple Listing Service and serves as the central information source for brokers to share their real estate listings with cooperating brokers.
- Wipe-out contingency This refers to a contingency where the buyer must sell their current residence prior to closing on the home they have made an offer upon.
- Zero down This means there is no out-of-pocket expense

Patios extend living space

Accessories such as cushions, fire places add to outdoor area

BY ANTHONY PECORARO The Dominion Post

Decks and patios are no longer just a place with a few chairs and a middle table to relax outside with — rather, they're becoming an outdoor living luxury area with a multitude of accessories to be added to the concrete or wood based spaces for many West Virginia homes.

The variety of patio options, according to Jason Rissle, owner of Riffle Contracting, LLC, in Morgantown, is tremendous but a few types have really been the big sellers of late, and are much different than some past varieties.

"I'm going to have to lean more towards stamp-textured concrete and stenciled concrete — we do a huge variety of that," Rissle said. "The paver patios used to be in, but now, the stamping techniques have come along and has pretty much wiped the pavers out."

As for the types of decks currently in style, Rissle said, the variety is wide with the price range being varied, as well.

treated wood structured deck to your higher-end composite and vinyl decking with all the accessories that go along with that — including electrical lighting, plumbing and outdoor kitchens," he said.

Accessories — the variety is something that has become much larger recently, with the numerous additions of sophisticated accessories to put on patios or decks. Janet Merschat, owner of Rustic by Design Fireplace & Patio, explained — even kitchens are becoming commonly added to outdoor areas.

"The fun part is all the accessories — that is probably the most fun part of patios," Merschat said. "Everyone is moving outside, trying to stay outside as long as they can. Another cool thing is wood fire ovens — anything you make in your oven, you can make in those and it's all wood-fired."

Merschat said pillows are an easy, but effective accessory to the overall look of an outdoor area, especially if the fabric of a couch isn't too exciting. However, the fabric used has to be Sunbrella fabric in order to withstand the various outside conditions.

"Pillows are beautiful, they add a lot of pop and color to blah

"Anything from your basic looking fabric," she said. "Sunbrella is a key — that fabric is fade resistant, mildew resistant, and stain resistant. Clean it with water and dawn or bleach and water — It's a very easy cleanup, but Sunbrella fabric is a must.

As for the types of couches to be purchased to add colorful pillows to, Merschat said, without hesitation, grouping furniture sets are the way to go — they offer much more than just a couple seats to relax in.

"Grouping are big sellers – circular crescent sofas are very popular, especially because people are liking the idea of staying outside more, entertaining more and being able to sit in a group setting," she said. "They're always centralized around a chap-sized table, which is where you can put all of your food and everything out."

Tying into the couch features, which are most suitable for all outdoor conditions, are also the bundle of cushion options something that adds a lot of comfort and something that requires little to no maintenance.

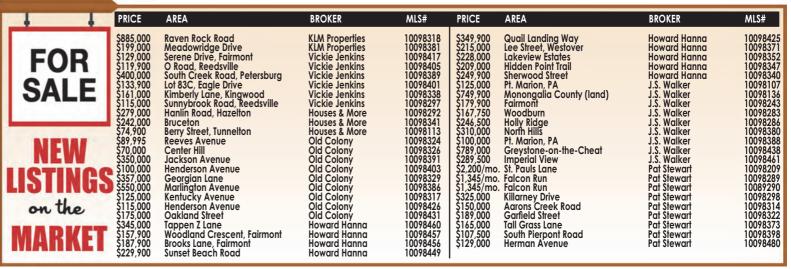

"The cool thing is, the big heavy cushions will get wet, but it takes it about an hour, two hours, at the most, to dry out," she said. "So, it's still useable, a lot of people are terrified to buy cushions, but if you just pop your cushions up, the water drains right down.

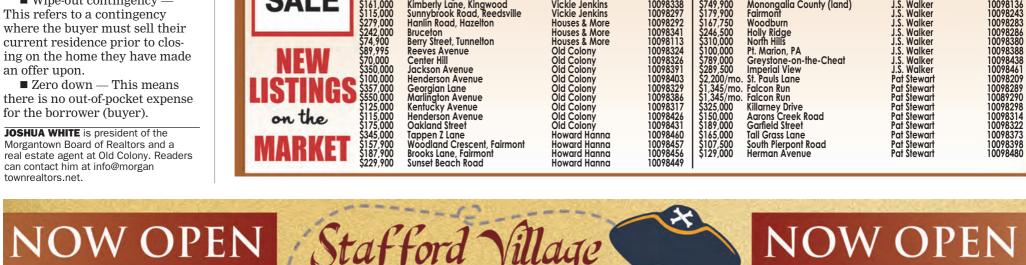

If space is limited to accessorize with, then a solution could be bistro tables — a simple and low-priced fixture, according to Merschat.

'Bistros are inexpensive and they're just fun. It's just a high top table, two bar stools, but you don't even need the bar stools," she said. "People just like to stand around the little bistro table — it's simple and nice for sitting out for coffee, but it's not really all that expensive and it doesn't take up much room." In terms of price ranges involving decks, Rissle said on the lower end — treated wood structures are probably going to be the most effective on the efficiency and on the cost side. As for patios — the cheapest is going to be more of the grey, broom-finished concrete, which also involves the lowest maintenance.

"The lowest maintenance is going to be the broom-finished concrete because the stamped concrete product is more of a decorative concrete product and with decorative and higher-end concretes also comes higher maintenance, to a degree," he said.

Use a PVC pipe to add storage to wet/dry shop vacuum

IF you don't have a shop vacuum, you really are missing the boat. A good wet/dry shop vacuum really can take care of some heavy-duty messes, both inside and outside the home. One way to add even more value to a good shop vac is to create onboard storage. Just grab a few scraps of PVC plastic pipe, attach end caps to the bottom of each pipe, and then glue the pipe pieces directly to the sides of the vacuum. Now you have a super place to store all of the attachments you will need to take care of the messiest cleanups.

DEAR CARRELLS: When I was cleaning out my garage, I found a whole can of undercoating spray for my car. I used it to coat a couple of rusting spots inside my guttering. I also had cleaned them out and found these spots earlier in the month. It looks like it's going to last for a while. — N.T.

A super hint

Remember when painting that one or more thin coats of paint will work much better than one thick coat. This is true when using spray paint or paint right out of the can. Even the paint that says it will cover in one coat might look better with two.

DEAR AL: I made a super tool holder for the front side of the back rack of my workbench. I glued some heavy-duty magnetic strips across the front of it. I am finding that I have a lot of tools that will stick right to it. It's so handy to store tools on. I even throw some hardware up there once in a while. I plan to put in pegboard one of these days, but until then, I've got some great tool storage in this magnetic strip. — G.O.

Q: I have a clogged vacuum hose line on my shop vacuum. Now what? How can I get the clog out? I can't even feel where it is. I don't want to have to cut into it or replace it just yet. What can I do? — T.H.

A: Take the hose off the vacuum cleaner and stretch it out. Now you can use a broom handle, long scrap of pipe or even a plumbing snake and work the clog to the end.

DEAR KELLY: I like to redo my apartment fairly often. I guess I just get bored with the same old stuff. Of course, I'm on a budget so I have to get creative to do it. I found out you can use fabric dye on furniture and rugs. It takes a lot of guts to do it the first time, but once you do, you'll love the results. Check your local craft stores for this stuff, and you'll see what all they have along these lines. You can give your rooms an update on the cheap. — J.M.

Kirkpatrick/Anna pottery features practical and strange containers

ARTISTS OFTEN express political ideas in their work, and many years later, collectors have trouble understanding the politics. Kirkpatrick/Anna pottery worked from 1839-'96 in Illinois and made pottery jugs and other useful containers

But they also created some very strange jugs.

Pottery pigs marked with railroad routes were made in the 1870s and 1880s to give to politicians, important owners or employees of the railroads. Those pigs sell today for about $12,000 up to a record price of $35,000.

But mysterious "Temperance" jugs were decorated with three-dimensional figures that can be confusing to someone from the 21st century. One spectacular salt-glazed jug, 10 1/4 inches high, was made with more than 18 applied designs representing the Civil War, slavery and the drinking of alcohol.

There is a bust of a Union soldier with a goatee being bitten by a snapping turtle. The rear end of a man in red pants "going in" probably is a reference to the evils of alcohol that "trap" him in the whiskey jug.

TERRY

One of the many snakes on the jug is eating a thin, bearded man. The head of a man, perhaps Abraham Lincoln, is shown near an eagle. The head of a black man and loose pottery chains represent slavery.

A man smoking a pipe and drinking from a mug, and a classical figure of a woman holding a lyre still are unidentified. The jug is well-marked, with the words "from Kirkpatrick Anna Pottery, Anna Union Co, Ills." It may be the most amazing of all of the Anna Pottery message pieces, and it sold at a Crocker Farm auction in Sparks, Md., for $69,000 in March.

The figures on this Anna Pottery vase made in the 1860s give a message about the Civil war, slavery and the evils of alcohol. It sold for $69,000 at a Crocker Farm auction in Sparks, Md., after 27 bids.

Q: I have a glass compote with a frosted stem and foot. The stem has three female faces in relief. The clear-glass bowl has a piecrust edge. It has been in my family for a long time. Can you give me any information about it?

A: Three Face is a pressed glass pattern made by George A. Duncan & Sons, which later became Duncan and Miller Glass Co. It was designed by John Ernest Miller in 1878, and the designer's wife supposedly was the model for the face. Three Face pattern glass was made until 1892. However, it has been reproduced. Original, early pieces sell for high prices, but reproductions sell for about $100.

Q: I bought a "Vibro-Shaver" at a garage sale and would like some information about it. I have the original box and the instructions, but it doesn't say who made it or the year it was made. It runs and is in excellent condition. It still has the original price tag of $5. What is it worth today?

A: Vibro was advertised in a 1937 issue of Popular Mechanics magazine as the only non-electric, automatic shaver made. The razor blade is held in the detachable head, which vibrates when the "key" on the front is wound. Shavers are not a popular collectible. Vibro-Shavers with original box sell online for $15 to $20 today.

Q: I have a silver-plated demitasse spoon by Crown Silver Plate Co. The engraving in the bowl of the spoon is of an old battleship. The letters on top read "Battleship Maine," and underneath the ship it reads "Captain Sigbee." The ship sunk in Havana Harbor on Feb. 15, 1898. I'd like to know if this spoon has any value.

A: The battleship Maine was sent to Cuba in January 1898 to protect American interests during Cuba's fight for independence from Spain. On Feb. 15, an explosion onboard sank the ship. The cause was never definitely determined. The sinking inspired the slogan "Remember the Maine, to Hell with Spain" and spurred America's entrance into the Spanish-American War. To commemorate the sinking, several silver companies made souvenir spoons picturing the battleship in the bowl and the head of Captain Sigbee on the finial at the end of the handle. The name "Crown Silver Plate Co." was used on silver flatware made by J.W. Johnson of New York City in 1898. Souvenir spoons like yours sell for about $5.

YOUR PLACE

BY LAN J. HEAVENS

The Philadelphia Inquirer (MCT)

Joe Ponessa, who spent 25 years as a housing, indoor environment and health specialist at Rutgers Cooperative Extension, responded to a recent column about mold testing. He said much of what he knows about mold remediation comes from associating with some of the top mold people in the country.

Concerning testing, he said the sentiment is generally against it: "If you can see and/or smell mold, it's there."

Testing provides little practical information, although there are some occasions when it is justified: Lawsuit evidence, doctor's request, validation of the effectiveness of a large, expensive cleanup, etc.

The most meaningful testing, air sampling, is ex-

"Generally, it's better to spend the money on finding and fixing the source of the moisture problem," Ponessa said. On the other hand, if there is a big problem, "a testing company that is not involved in cleanup may be able to write up detailed specifications for cleanup, to be used as a bidding document when contractors." The world of cleanup firms ranges from highly qualified to not very, Ponessa said.

Here's another sort of test that is definitely advisable: Energy audit. Bobby DiFulgentiz, energy expert for Lennox Industries, offers four quick ways to make your house more efficient:

Examine outside-facing walls, windows and doors to identify cracks or holes where air escapes. Seal leaks with caulk or weather-stripping.

When a heating and cooling system's air filter becomes clogged by dirt and other particles, the unit can't produce enough airflow to function properly. Check and clean filters monthly to reduce operating costs and save energy.

Check to see whether your home has at least five inches of insulation where needed. Add more, if nec-

Evaluate your home's lighting needs and determine any areas in which natural light is sufficient. Also, replace short-lived, incandescent lightbulbs with compact fluorescent bulbs. These bulbs use less energy, last up to 10 times longer, and can save you $65 each year.

DiFulgentiz says this energy audit can take an hour of your time. The potential

Rain barrels fill needs for home, garden

DIGGIN' IN

BY KATHY VAN MULLEKOM

Daily Press (Newport News, Va.) (MCT)

Gardens are typically blessed with spring rains that bring summer flowers and then the hot, dry months of July and August take their toll.

Often, thoughts turn to, "How do I water without running my water bill sky high?"

A rain barrel could be part of the solution.

It's hard to justify rain barrels for major landscapes, but they are quite practical for small vegetable and flower gardens, especially plants grown in containers, according to gardeners.

More importantly, rain barrels benefit the environment.

"Installing a rain barrel is one of the easiest things a homeowner can do to protect water resources," said Julia Hillegrass, team leader with askHRgreen.org, an environmental public awareness program for the 16 counties and cities in Hampton Roads, Va.

"Rain barrels pull double duty by providing a free source of water for outdoor uses while preventing water pollution. When you catch rainwater instead of sending it down the storm drain, it prevents pollutants like fer-into local waterways. "Plus with your free source of water, you'll be conserving water and the energy used to treat and deliver tap water to your home. It's an all-around great addition to any home.

"Watering plants, washing your car, even giving your dog a bath — all great ways to use the rainwater you collect."

While you can purchase a pricey rain barrel from a retail source, you can make your own for about $50, proof "going green" doesn't have to be expensive, added Hillegrass.

If you are a do-it-yourselfer, Williamsburg, Va., master gardener Dennis Wool said YouTube has the best how-to videos that show a variety of ways to make a barrel.

He recommends using food-grade plastic barrels because some barrels can contain hazardous materials that should not be recycled.

"From very simple designs to elaborate combinations that link multiple barrels together, all can be found under the search 'rain barrels,' " said Wool. who leads rain barrel-making workshops for his master gardener unit: www.jc cwmbg.org.

Many water conservationists also go a step further — decorating their rain barrels in fanciful or practical ways. "One of our members painted her rain barrel to blend into the brickwork and siding of her home —

pretty clever," Wool said. If you want to paint your rain barrel, first prime it and use acrylic paint. Once your design is done and painting is finished, clear coat it to preserve its beauty.

Some barrel-decorating tips from Newport News. Va., master gardeners, nn mastergardeners.org, in-

- Use stencils for decorative designs.
- Use branches, leaves or any materials or shapes to spray on silhouettes.
- Paint your barrel the same color as your home.
- Use it as a fun project

Installing it: Rain barrels should be placed immediately adjacent to down spouts, according to Wool.

Maintaining it: If you use water in the rain barrel regularly, mosquito breeding is not a problem, according to Wool. Otherwise, cover your opening with window screening material mosquitoes out.

"One creative person put gold fish in their barrel to take care of the bugs, and it was a real eye-catcher," he said.

Hop to it: Plant what you need to brew beer

You don't need a garden to succeed as a home brewer, but growing your own ingredients is a flavorful step up.

Much of the creativity involved in crafting a custom-made beer starts with the plants you select.

"The modern palate pretty much demands some hops in beer, but beyond that, there's a lot of choices available," said Dennis Fisher, an organic farmer from Winterport, Maine.

Fisher, who with his brother Joe wrote a popular reference book for beginners, "The Homebrewer's Garden" (Storey Publishing, 1998), says one of the most satisfying aspects of home brewing is producing some or all of your own ingredients from scratch. "Scratch brewing," the brothers wrote, "refers to the cultivation, preparation and use of hops, barley, malts and other non-barley grains, and adjuncts ranging from fruits to herbs to vegetables.'

Growing your own ingredients ensures that the products are as organic, fresh and unique as pos-cheaper than store-bought, the Fishers say.

The four basic ingredients needed for brewing are malt (malting provides the fermented sugar that yeast feeds on to produce alcohol), hops (reduces spoilage and balances the sugar's sweetness with a bitter flasible. Homegrown also is vor), brewer's yeast and water (about 90 percent of beer's content).

"Hops are a particularly good (garden) choice because they thrive almost anywhere," Dennis Fisher said. "They are also a great addition to a landscape big, attractive columns of greenery."

Chili peppers, which would be good additions to a beer recipe if used sparingly, hang in a pepper display at The Pike Place Market in Seattle. Hop flowers that are both ornamental and edible hang on the vine in a garden in Langley, Wash. Hops are an easy-to-grow perennial.

If the water from your tap tastes good, then it also should taste good in the beer you make, Fisher said. "But if it's chlorinated, then you need to let it stand overnight to allow the chemicals to outgas before brewing with it."

Adjuncts, in homebrew speak, are plants used to replace or complement hops to give beers distinctive flavors, odors and colors.

"Just about any flower you can eat can be made into a beer," said Rebecca Kneen, an organic farmer and writer from Sorrento, British Columbia, who wrote about backyard brewing in the Gardens," By Niki Jabbour (Storey Publishing).

"It's useful to experiment with them all though to determine how much should be used and when they should be added,' Kneen said.

Some common and not so common home brewer's garden adjuncts include:

- Herbs: (Bittering) Sage, horehound, gentian, yarrow. (Flavoring) Juniper, rosemary, ginger, oregano, mint, thyme. (Aromatic) Lavender, lemon balm, chamomile.
- Flowers: Nasturtiums, wild roses, scented geranium leaves, daylilies and marigolds.
- Vegetables and fruits: Rhubarb, blackberries and elderberries, pumpkin, chili peppers, sorghum, apples. "We like to add spruce tips to some beers," Fisher says. "It's more of a wild-gathered than home-grown adjunct that in Colonial times was a hops substitute."

Study: Millennials buying homes later

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Don't blame the millennial generation for lackluster home sales.

They are increasingly ethnically diverse, more educated and less likely to be married — all factors that make them less likely to own a home, said a new report released Wednesday by Trulia, an online real estate firm. After adjusting for these population changes, younger Americans are actually buying homes at the same rate as they did during the late-1990s.

"For at least the past 20 years, there have been significant demographic headwinds for homeownership for young people," said Jed Kolko, chief economist at Trulia.

The analysis suggests that the re- for all its damage to the economy — did little to turn off millennials from the idea of owning a home compared to previous generations. In fact, the report shows that the major group whose ownership rates suffered because of the downturn is middle-aged Americans.

The easy credit offered during the housing bubble caused more young people to buy than they otherwise would and masked the impact of the demographic changes, according to Trulia. The bursting of that bubble and the resulting recession that began in 2007 then caused ownership to fall where it should be given the demographic shifts. Because a greater percentage of younger Americans are attending college and graduate school, they are settling down a few years later — which causes them to delay buying a home.

Census figures show that the share of 18-34 year-olds who are married is 30 percent, down from 47 percent in 1983. Just 29 percent of them live with children, compared to 39 percent three decades ago. Since more people in the age range are single and childless, Trulia looked at the number of homeowners who are also identified as the head of their households. After adjusting for these population shifts, the share of people under 35-years old who own homes is the same as it was for 1997.

Standard Census data, which aren't adjusted for these factors, show that the ownership rate among those younger than 35 has declined to 36.2 percent from 38.6 percent in 1997. Slightly less than 65 percent of the country owns a home, down from a peak of 69 percent in the middle of 2006.

While the weak economic rebound has affected home buying, Trulia's analysis puts more of an emphasis on demographics than much of the real estate industry has to explain poor

Lawrence Yun, chief economist at the National Association of Realtors, blames the lack of buying among younger people on the sluggish recovery, now entering its sixth year.

"It's principally the economic factors: Jobs and student debt," said Yun, noting the difficulty of saving for a down payment when earning modest wages and repaying college loans.

The number of first-time homebuyers in May was near record lows at 27 percent, versus a historic average of 40 percent, the Realtors said last month. Yun says that as the economy continues to bounce back, so, too, will sales to first-time buyers.

Couple builds tiny house

BY MARK POTTER

The Lawton Constitution

LAWTON, Okla. — Thinking small when it comes to living space.

A Lawton couple recently completed a project to build a compact and "portable" house they will be transporting to its future site in Colorado. Their small house is based on the model of space and energy efficiency.

Cody Greene and his fiancée, Kelly Bentley, built the small house that is 20 feet in length and 8 1/2 in width. The house contains only 200 square-feet of space but that space is very efficient as it includes shelves and cabinets in areas that would normally serve as dead space such as the stairwell to the upper loft that will serve as sleeping quarters.

"We built the whole thing ourselves," Greene said.

Greene said the couple was not the first to undertake such a project. He said the idea of building small and efficient homes was started by a California developer in the 1990s who sells his home plans.

"We took ideas from many small house plans to fit our needs," he said.

The small house, built with an allwood exterior, is heated by a wood stove that has a metal barrier to keep the heat from touching the wood. Bentley said that piece of steel dropped the cost of equipping the house with the stove to only $50. Air conditioning is provided by a ceilingmounted fan unit.

The living space is a small area with a couch, two closets, two cabinets and a shelf above them. The kitchen includes a 10-cubic-foot refrigerator, sink and storage space for cooking supplies. At the bottom on the floor is a dog area for the couple's two Boston Terriers. The bathroom includes a shower and tub, along with a compost toilet and mural on the ceiling made by Greene, who is an artist and muralist.

Upstairs is a loft, or sleeping hollow, that includes additional storage space in the bed's headboard. The sleeping hollow is reached via a staircase in which the stairs themselves serve as openable storage spaces.

Although the couple built the house themselves, the electrical project was done by a contractor.

"I'm glad we chose a professional for that," Greene said.

Also to be contracted out is the transportation of the home to its new destination, Colorado Springs, Colo. That will be done by a professional driver via a truck pulling the house on a new and heavy-duty trailer that will also serve as the future foundation of the home.

"The test drive will be the [first] drive," Greene said. "It will reduce some stress on us."

YOUR PLACE

BY ALAN J. HEAVENS The Philadelphia Inquirer (MCT)

When I started writing about real estate full time. the experts cautioned me not to chase month-to-month data, and to focus instead on quarterly and yearly figures.

I've tried to toe that line. As agents, builders and economists would be quick to tell you, real estate is cyclical "a roller-coaster ride," as someone once told me — and it's best to look at the market over time to determine longterm trends.

These days, few will argue that the housing market is still seeing low mortgage-ap-rates, housing plication starts and home sales, and that many potential homeowners remain cautious.

Month-to-month numbers are likely to be especially bumpy, said Don Frommeyer, of the National Association of Mortgage Brokers.

"In real estate, it's important to focus on the yearto-year outlook," Frommeyer said. "A lot of outside factors can have an impact on monthly numbers, including harsh weather or emergencies."

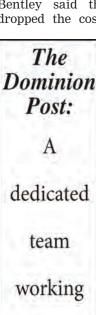

Last winter in Mount Airy, Pa., was a good illustration of the effect of weather on the numbers.

Ruth Feldman, of Weichert Realtors McCarthy Associates, said days on market there increased this year to 119 days, from 75.

Pending and sold units also were down in the first couple months of the year, and Feldman blamed the weather for both.

In Washington Township, said Mike Lentz of Keller Williams Realty, the reluctance of sellers to put their houses on the market in cold and snowy weather contributed to the number of multiple bids in his and other markets.

Lack of inventory makes what is on the market a valuable commodity, though the perceived value may bring offers only at or near asking price.

For many people, gathering possessions is just the stuff of life

Los Angeles Times (MCT)

LOS ANGELES — We cherish things and accumulate them. We move them from shelf to shelf, and from home to home. The federal government estimates that a quarter of Americans with two-car garages don't use them for automobiles. Even those without a permanent home carry their stuff around with them.

We like to shop, own, trade or give away. Things matter to us, for reasons practical and emotional.

"Our possessions all have magical qualities. Many, if not most, of the things we keep have an essence that goes beyond the physical character of the object," said Randy Frost, a professor at Smith College, in Northampton, Mass., who has studied and written about hoarding and is the author of "Stuff."

A stroll through the Sunday flea market outside Fairfax High School provides a catalog of some of those magical objects: Varsity letter jackets, rotary phones, typewriters, fur blankets, old ties and cowboots. Butterflies pinned to cardboard and framed. A crystal Eiffel Tower. A blue guitar.

Vendors collect stuff to sell to people, who often resell the stuff all over again.

"This market has the best eclectic stuff — a collection of people's things that are old," said LaNell Petersen, shopping on a recent weekend with her sisters. She likes the hunt for something she believes is more valuable than its price.

Consider these statistics cited by professional organizer Regina Lark: The average U.S. household has 300,000 things, from paper clips to ironing boards. U.S. children make up 3.7 percent of children on the planet but have 47 percent of all toys and children's books. So why can't we let go? And what are the implications of our reluctance to pare down, our inability to get organized?

The notion that things don't matter is rubbish, the experts say. They matter for many reasons: Keeping up with the Joneses, recalling departed loved ones, even objective value — like the 17th century Dutch painting that is among many objects of desire in Donna Tartt's "The Goldfinch."

Here are a few tips on how to figure out what to save and what to toss among your possessions.

1. Is it truly meaningful? Just because you picked up a seashell in France doesn't necessarily mean it reminds you of the trip there, Rubin said.

2. Is it containable? Consider a thimble to remind you of a grandparent rather than, say, a table.

3. Is it part of a collection? When people amass a bunch of something, such as coins or Disney figurines, they start to seem more valuable. Don't be fooled. That still may not make them worth keeping.

4. "Why not surround yourself with just that which gives you pleasure?

With love and beauty and things that fill your heart and mind," said professional organizer Regina Lark. "Like clothing. Keep what makes you look hot. But if it's only OK, why keep it?"

5. When an object appeals to you, said "Unstuff Your Life" author Andrew Mellen, ask yourself what you'll do with it, where it will live, whether it will replace something else. And sometimes you might conclude that you needn't own it.

6. Was it a gift? A freebie? Just because someone gave it to you doesn't mean you have to keep it, Rubin said.

Unless she's ill, I wouldn't keep the policy. Instead, I'd do some long-term investing. It won't take long to get to $250,000 with $7,200 a year.

It's the kind of thing that sounds like it'll take forever, but you've got to remember you've got growth and interest in the equation. I wouldn't put money into a life insurance policy at age 71, unless there's someone being left behind who really needs the money and it doesn't sound like there is in this case.

It would probably take about 13 years for the money to turn into $250,000. Assuming she's healthy, I'd rather do that and bet on her living. That way, she can leave an estate and avoid the expense and rip-off part of the universal life policy.

DEAR DAVE: I have a very large amount of student loan debt. Where would that go in your Baby Steps plan? — Jade

Dear Jade: Baby Step 2 is where you pay off all debt except for your house. The fact that it's a large amount of student loan debt doesn't change anything.

Hopefully, with your very large amount of student loan debt, you also have a very large income.

Believe it or not, there are some really sad situations out there where people have gone $200,000 into debt for a four-year degree in a field where they make $50,000 a year. That kind of thinking and behavior is ridiculous, but it's out there.

You've got to get focused and intense about paying off this mess and getting on with your life.

Remember, your income is your largest wealth-building tool. You can't save and plan for the future when all your money is flying out the door to pay back debt.

Keane said people are drawn to the co-op for its locally grown organic produce and items that are not available in chain grocery stores. Several varieties of organic butters, jams, and jellies are available.

"Probably our biggest selling product is local eggs," Keane said. "We have probably over 15 local farms that supply to us and deliver, usually about six days a week. Some eggs are even laid that morning and delivered to us."

Keane continued by saying, 'Our [second biggest] seller is probably Kombucha, which is a fermented tea drink. It has a ton of health benefits and everything. Most of our members order that by the case."

In addition to groceries, the co-op has organic vitamins, shampoos and soaps. It also has a selection of jewelry and a wide variety of fragrance oils available for purchase.

Many workers put off retirement, take 'encore' jobs

BY WALTER HAMILTON

Los Angeles Times (MCT)

After Fred Wallace was laid off from a high-paying job in 2011, the 56-year-old knew the odds of landing a comparable position were slim.

He polished his LinkedIn profile and networked like crazy. But his yearlong job search yielded only a handful of interviews and no offers.

So he shifted gears, embarking on an "encore" career by working part time at a child and family services organization in San Bernardino.

Wallace is among millions of older Americans launching professional second acts revolving around some form of public service. In the aftermath of the recession, encore careers have caught on among baby boomers, some of whom recoil at the notion of conventional retirement, or aren't financially prepared.

Wallace uses the marketing skills he honed during 28 years at HBO to raise funds for a program helping young people smooth the transition out of foster care. It's high-level work that brings personal fulfillment and a paycheck albeit a significantly smaller one.

"It's terrific to know you can help an organization be better at what they do, you can give back, and you can earn a modest stipend," Wallace said.

Roughly 9 million Americans ages 44 to 70, or 9 percent of the 100 million people in that age range, work in encore jobs, according to a 2011 survey by En core.org, a nonprofit organization, and the MetLife foundation. An additional 31 million would like to.

"People are going to live longer, and people of modest means are going to work much longer," said Marc Freedman, the group's founder. "How do we make that something people genuinely look forward to, and that could be important to society?"

The share of older Americans in the workforce has risen sharply since the mid-1990s, and polls show millions of people plan to work in years that once were classified as retirement.

Among those 55 and older, 40 percent have jobs or are looking for work, according to the Labor Department. That's hovering around the highest level since the early 1960s.

In June, a survey by Merrill Lynch and research firm Age Wave found that 72 percent of people 50 and older plan to work in their "retirement" years.

The encore dynamic is far from a cure-all for the professional and financial challenges facing older workers.

Many jobs in encore fields such as education and social services are relatively low-paying. That limits their viability for people with pressing financial needs, such as insufficient retirement

Busy boss plus crisis is stressful

Q: I work full time managing a busy team, and also have a family medical issue that will require attention for some time. What can I do to successfully keep all of this going?

A: Be clear about priorities and rely on your team to get through this challenging time.

The inner game

This situation is a clear recipe for stress, so start by equipping yourself to keep that aspect under control. If you don't have some brief periods of downtime built into your day, start now, taking the next five minutes to get centered. You may want to sit quietly or go for a walk — whichever is most grounding for you. Now focus on your breathing, noticing the air flowing in through your nostrils and out through your mouth, letting tension and anxiety ease with each breath. Repeat this now and then throughout your day. Just the few minutes invested will have great returns in helping you maintain balance.

What are your expectations for yourself? Superwoman? Realistically, when you add a new layer of effort to your life, something else will have to shift. Don't let it be your self-care, because then it'll all fall apart and nothing will be done well. You need to be clear about what needs to get done, what's nice to have and what can get delegated.

Get a handle on the todo list, being very concrete and specific. "Take care of Aunt Annie" is much harder to plan for than "Take Uncle Fred to the doctor on Tuesday." If cataloging your responsibilities starts to overwhelm you, return to your breathing for a moment. And be sure to include both work and home on your list.

Consider the resources available to help. Who are your partners on the home front; for example, your spouse or siblings? Who are the rocks on your team? Where does your boss fit in terms of providing help as needed?

The outer game

Realistically, you're going to need extra help. Turning to your team can also yield returns in terms of staff development but also cohesion as a group. Have a meeting with them and let them know what's going on for you, with an appropriate level of detail. Talk about aspects your need to delegate more, and don't worry if you don't have a specific plan; this provides an opportunity to see who steps up for a larger role.

Then work with your team and your boss on exactly who will do what so that expectations are clear and your team is set up for success.

Very importantly, also be clear about the parts of your role that you can't or won't delegate — being there to support each of your team members. If they know that your heart and mind are still with them, the work will get done.

Take care of yourself, keeping the basics of nutrition, rest, exercise and fun all in place. The little things — a good laugh, for example — will help you keep it together.

The last word

Asking for and accepting help will make it possible for you to keep everything going during a busy and high-stress time.

A checklist for keeping you focused at work

BY MICHELLE V. RAFTER The Orange County Register (MCT)

A quick check of Facebook and next thing you know, a half-hour's passed. Start chatting with a coworker and suddenly 20 minutes is gone and the report you were supposed to finish by lunch is late. Workplace distractions are everywhere, especially in an age of social media and open-plan offices. In the face of so much temptation, accomplishing what you're paid to do can be tough.

Tough, but not impossible. To find out more, I asked successful professionals from various walks of life for their secrets to staying productive and getting things done at work. Here's what they said:

■ Make a list. To-do lists may be basic, but there's a reason so many people use them: They work.

Christopher Kim, an earth and environmental sciences professor at Chapman University, prioritizes his to-do list using efficiency expert Stephen Covey's time-management system. Kim assigns tasks to one of four quadrants based on how urgent and important they are, from "Urgent and Important" to "Not Urgent and Not Important." He keeps his quadrant to-do list on a piece of paper in front of his laptop stand at all times.

Vanessa Scarbo, human resources and operations director at Irvine, Calif.based Burnham Benefits Insurance Services, likes to get a head start on hers. "Before I leave the office for the day, I have started the to-do list for the next, rolling over items that didn't get completed or require follow-up," she says.

■ Use your phone. Kim takes a picture of his to-do list with his iPhone and stores it in a separate photo album on the phone "so I can access it if I lose the sheet of paper." Mary Ann Poladian, an independent college admissions consultant in San Clemente, relies on her iPhone's calendar to track client appointments and deadlines. "It helps," she says.

■ Block out time for uninterrupted work. Nina Ries, principal of a Santa Monica business law practice, schedules work in one- to two-hour chunks. "My assistant helps keep me focused and on track by serving as gatekeeper," Ries says. "During those focused times, I only respond to urgent calls or emails."

Tesla wants to hire veterans

San Jose Mercury News (MCT)

FREMONT, Calif. Tesla Motors, which is on a mission to bring electric cars to the masses, now has another goal: To become a leading employer of America's military veterans.

"We want to be know throughout the veteran community as a great place to work," Arnnon Geshuri, Tesla's vice president of human resources, said in an interview. "Veterans are a great source of talent for Tesla, and we're going after it." Tesla's workforce is exploding as it expands production of its Model S, prepares to launch the Model X crossover SUV and enters new markets overseas. The company has more than 6,000 employees, and of those, 300 — or roughly 5 percent are veterans, including its logistics director, former officer Adam Navy Another Plumpton. 600 veteran candidates are in the hiring pipeline, according to Geshuri.

"Tesla has risen to the top" among companies known for creating veteran-friendly workplaces, said Ted Daywalt, the president and chief executive of VetJobs, the nation's leading military job board. "They have a good reputation. They hire veterans who can talk to other veterans. There is a language in the military, and having someone who can speak the lingo is important."

Veterans are a good fit for Tesla because many gained advanced technical, electrical and mechanical skills while serving in the military-skills applicable to making electric cars. They are also used to working as part of tightly-knit groups.

Greg Reichow, Tesla's vice president of production, says the company is eager to hire veterans because it has found them to be excellent employees who share the company's sense of mission.

"At Tesla, we're not just building cars. We're trying to transform transportation," Reichow said. "They also know how to lead teams, focus teams and function on teams, and they have incredible integrity and discipline."

Tesla is aggressively recruiting veterans while trying to create a culture where veterans feel supported and appreciated once they are on board.

Jason Noma, a former Army sergeant and intelligence analyst, focuses specifically on military recruiting as a member of Tesla's burgeoning HR team, and has helped increase efforts to hire veterans through word-ofmouth, partnerships with veterans groups and recent events such as the Oakland Veteran Job Fair.

In the third-floor cafeteria of the Tesla factory in Fremont, a vintage "Uncle Sam" poster invites veterans to connect with other veterans via a series of casual monthly gatherings held at the factory. All vets, regardless of military branch or length of service, are welcome to attend and share ideas on how to improve internal programs. Many vets wear exclusive T-shirts emblazoned with the Tesla logo and the American flag, and Veterans Day is a company-wide paid holiday. But the company's support for former and current military personnel does not end there.

"HR was phenomenal with my deployment," said Jason Deming, a 35-yearold vehicle test technician who is also a member of the Air National Guard and was deployed in 2013 to Afghanistan with the Moffett Field-based 129th Rescue Wing. "I can serve my country and save lives but also work on the forefront of technology."

Employers spy to check job performance

IF IT SEEMS like employers don't trust employees well, they don't.

Bad apples in the workplace bunch — or simply fear of bad apples — have pushed many employers to use an array of employee tracking devices.

GPS equipment on delivery vehicles tells where people are at any given moment. Computer software tracks every website visited, and blocks some of them. Video cameras watch comings and goings. Supervisors listen in on customer phone calls.

The workplace today is something of a Big Brother world. Workers shouldn't assume a right to privacy. On company computers, phones or vehicles, there is no right to do what you want when you want.

And that makes perfect sense, said Ivory Thompson, operations manager of Retina-X, the parent company of MobileSpy. Aptly named, that. It's a oftware brand used by employers to monitor employees' online activity.

"Employers want to make sure their employees are doing what they're supposed to do, that they're not giving away trade secrets," Thompson said in an interview. "It's also for productivity purposes."

No surprise there. With staffing cut to the bones in many organizations, employers want to make sure that everyone on payroll pulls the intended weight.

Product vendors like Thompson, human resource experts and employment law attorneys all recommend that employees be clearly informed about whatever monitoring is used.

'Employees should sign off on it when they're hired," Thompson said, and employee manuals should explain the monitoring and use policies.

For the record, here's MobileSpy's list of the top five industries for employee monitoring:

Don't back down when co-workers drive dangerously

QUESTION: I'm afraid that I could be hurt or killed by colleagues who insist on texting while driving. Recently, one of my co-workers offered to drive us to a meeting with a new client. On the way back to the office, "Brad' received a text from his daughter and began reading it while we were in heavy traffic.

When Brad started typing a reply, I told him that this made me uncomfortable. He indignantly replied that he is a good driver who has never had an accident. Ever since that incident, Brad has made mocking comments to others about my "texting paranoia." How

less colleague is acting like an idiot. If Brad is too stupid to comprehend that one cannot simultaneously type, steer, and watch the road, then someone should show him the statistics on people who have been killed or injured due to texting behind the wheel. As long as he continues this practice, you should avoid riding with him.

However, you may find that Brad's contemptuous account of your "texting paranoia" actually turns out to be helpful. A reputation for being concerned about distracted driving might cause others to curb their bad habits whenever you're a passenger. But if they don't, you should continue to speak up, for their sake as well as your own.

Because distracted driving is a serious and widespread problem, every organization should have a widely publicized prohibition against it. Anyone wishing to promote this idea with their employer can find a sample policy on the U.S. Department of Labor website at https://www.osha. gov/distracted-driving/ modelpolicies.html.

WVU continues search for fast radio bursts

Submitted to The Dominion Post

If you closely follow scientific discoveries about the universe, you'll have read that across the sky as many as 10,000 celestial radio signals a day are emitting a bright pulse which lasts for only a few milliseconds.

And then, as far as scientists can tell, each pulse isn't seen again.

You can't see them with the naked eve. and scientists don't know their origins or what they mean. And up until 2007, no one officially knew they existed.

Scientists at the Arecibo telescope, in Puerto Rico ,have published findings recently that confirm the existence of these radio pulses that a WVU undergraduate student first discovered.

David Narkevic, then a physics and political science student from Philippi, looked through data from the Parkes radio telescope in Australia and found a single pulse shorter than five milliseconds that didn't seem to repeat.

"They are fairly easy to detect," said Duncan Lorimer, astrophysics professor at WVU. "But what we can't do easily is pinpoint their position."

Lorimer remembers when Narkevic showed him the original burst. It was clearly from far beyond the Milky Way galaxy.

Until now, scientists only found other examples of the phenomenon at different locations in the sky fewer than 10 more times and only from data collected at Parkes. Lorimer said this led some researchers to suspect that the data could be reflecting the telescope's activity and not the universe's.

"It's very significant," he says of the most recent discovery, "because it's the first example of one of these fast radio bursts found by a different telescope. We can be very, very confident now that it's a celestial phenomenon. That's the biggest take away result from this paper."

With the recent news from Arecibo, the hunt is on to find out what's really going on in each fraction of a degree of the sky where the bursts appear. And WVU researchers are very much

The big question, Lorimer said, is whether the signals are coming from the neighborhood of our galaxy or whether they're much further away in the cosmos.

"If you asked me to make a bet, I would say it's more likely to be cosmological, but I can't prove that at the moment," he said.

That would tell us where they are. But what are they? They're not pulsars, the spinning neutron stars that send beams of radio waves with more regularity than a military clock.

If they're far away, Lorimer said, that probably puts them in the realm of the exotic. Stars colliding. The explosion of black holes — first proposed by Stephen Hawking in 1974.

He said this quest is reminiscent of the long road to discover the origin of gamma ray bursts, first noticed by military satellites in the 1960s. It took 30 years for scientists to prove that, yes, these bursts came from beyond our galaxy.

"So hopefully it won't take us another 30 years to find the answer," Lorimer said of these newly discovered bursts. "And it could actually be that these radio bursts are related to gamma ray bursts.

"I think within the next year or two we'll know the answer to this basic question of whether they're extragalactic or not."

And it will be an exciting one or two years, he thinks.

WVU researchers are also at Arecibo and elsewhere gathering data in the field of radio astronomy, which in a matter of a few years has become a top specialty for the University.

Lorimer said right now the WVU Department of Physics and Astronomy is installing high-performance computing facilities at Arecibo to analyze data being collected for sightings of these bursts.

At the National Radio Astronomy Observatory in Green Bank, WVU researchers are involved in projects which are collecting data from the smaller telescopes on site as part of the search.

He and fellow professor Maura McLaughlin, among others at WVU, are well equipped to study these short radio bursts because they're already looking for the radio waves that pulsars are sending in short, regular bursts.

Theatre alumni hit New York Music Fest

Original musical selected for run this week in NYC

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Matt Webster and Taylor Ferrera have been best friends since they were students in the School of Theatre and Dance at WVU graduating less than four years ago — they both moved to New York City, ready to take a bite out of the big apple.

And did they ever.

Both have achieved tremendous success individually in a short time, and now, a show they co-wrote titled "Propaganda! The Musical" has been selected for the prestigious New York Musical Theatre Festival, the largest annual musical theater festival in America. The show opens Wednesday and will run through July 27 at PTC Performance Space, 555 West 42nd St., in the heart of New York City's Theatre District.

This world premiere is directed by Nathan Brewer and the cast of 10 also includes MaryJoanna Grisso, a Morgantown native who graduated from the School of Music in 2011 (who just came off a national tour of "West Side Story" as Maria), as well as other actors and singers who have performed on Broadway, Off Broadway, or toured nationally with various shows.

"Propaganda! The Musical" is the story of a somewhat ignorant young man who takes over his family's business and soon finds out that it is full of secrets. Now it's up to him to cover up the biggest scandal since Watergate.

Armed only with a clever idea, he edits, cutting things, and adding must also fight off the evil mastermind—Agent X—and save the world from certain doom.

Add to that an energetic, catchy score and maybe even a tap dancing president (rumors are that it is Richard M. Nixon), and the result is a show that provides lots of fun for the audience.

The partners have been working on the musical for the past three years, constantly revising it, writing new songs, and performing it in workshops. On March 25 of this year, when the "Propaganda! The Musical" had its premiere reading in New York City, people were standing in the back and sitting on the floor for a chance to see it.

"We have been constantly working on music, working on lyrics, working on the book, changing things around, making things to flesh out the show and make it more fun and more awesome," Webster said.

"We hope we can continue to work on the show and get a commercial run," Webster said. "That's the dream. To continue to work, collaborate and move forward."

They both hope to have future lives where they continue doing what they love.

"I don't think I'll ever stop wanting this show to be produced," Ferrera said.

"In the meantime, I'm willing to serve shrimp in Times Square so I can write and produce new musicals in my free time."

Campers attending 4-H State Camp at WVU Jackson's Mill assemble in the Council Circle. The WVU Extension Service has issued a challenge to 4-Hers and alumni to make donations to help renovate and restore the Circle.

Nearly every camper who has attended 4-H State Camp at WVU Jackson's Mill has been in the Council Circle. Now. WVU Extension Service is inviting 4-Hers and alumni to take part in the Council Circle Challenge to help renovate it.

The Council Circle Challenge - a year-long development campaign — calls upon the community to engage in a social media challenge through Facebook and Twitter. Participants interact and compete with others to reach a $25,000 fundraising goal, which will be partnered with a $100,000 from a family 4-H and Jackson's Mill alumni.

To fuel the competition, donations can be made on behalf of a specific 4-H tribe, or can be given without a tribe association. After donating, participants are given access to "I gave" social media graphics and are encouraged to share and challenge their friends to do the same.

The funding will renovate existing the Council Circle to include a new concrete foundation. drainage system, benches, Council Rock totem poles. The second phase of improvements includes refreshing the surrounding areas of the Council Circle, with new walkways, lighting and steps through the wooded area around the Circle's location.

The newly constructed Council Circle with comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act, allowing for more inclusion and improved accessibility to all campers, staff and visitors.

WVU professor named Fellow of chem society

Submitted to The Dominion Post

A WVU professor of chemical engineering has been the first at the university to be named a Fellow of the American Chemical Society, which recognizes members for outstanding achievements in and contributions to science, the profession and the society.

Dady Dadyburjor was recognized for his research in catalysis and fuel production including fuels and chemicals from coal and natural gas, as well as his leadership service to the organization's Division of Petroleum Chemistry, the Division of Energy and Fuels, and the Council for Chemical Research.

"I am humbled to be joining such an elite group and to be recognized by my colleagues across the breadth of chemistry," Dadyburjor said.

Dadyburjor is one of 99 scientists to earn the designation in 2014. He will be honored at a special ceremony at the American Chemical Society National Meeting in San Francisco on Aug. 11.

A member of the WVU faculty since 1983, Dadyburjor has taught virtually every undergraduate course in chemical engineering and many of its graduate courses during his tenure. He also served as department chair from 1999-2009. A Fellow of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers, Dadyburjor joins only 17 other scientists worldwide who are Fellows of both the American Chemical Society and the American Institute of Chemical Engineers.

He has served as a councilor of the Pittsburgh Local Section of the Institute, and will serve as its student liaison in 2015. Additionally, he is an editor of the journal, "Energy and Fuels," and is a member of the editorial board of the "Journal of Fuel Chemistry and Technology.'

Dadyburjor received his master's and doctoral degree in chemical engineering from the University of Delaware. He was awarded a bachelor's degree in the discipline from the Indian Institute of Technology in Bombay.

Six to attend European conference

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Six WVU students will travel to the Netherlands to participate in The European International Model United Nations Conference.

Under this year's theme "Pursuing Perpetual Peace: Ideals and Interests at War," more than 200 of the brightest students from countries around the world will come together in The Hague, from Monday-July 27, to discuss and explore solutions to overcome the contrary international ideals and national interests.

The WVU Division of Student Life and the International Studies Program in the Eberly College of Arts and Sciences has been sending students to the annual Conference since 2009. Dean of Students Corey Farris and director for the WVU International Studies program Joe Hagan will accompany the students.

"The opportunity to participate in this conference is a fantastic international experience for students early in their college career," Hagan said.

More than 25 students have been sent to the Conference since 2009, with several groups bringing back awards and honors. Last year's students came home with five of the 24 outstanding or honorable mention delegate awards presented.

Hoping for a repeat performance, this year's representatives will be Colin Lopez, sophomore Arabic and economics major from Morgantown; Dillon Muhly-Alexander, junior international studies and geography major from West Union; Emma van der Aarde, junior international studies and French major from Martinsburg; Samantha Shimer, sophomore international studies major from Parkersburg; Kayla Rowsey, junior political science major from Redhouse, and Amanda Stoner, junior international studies and environmental geoscience major from Harpers Ferry.

Engineering student awarded STEM Mountains of Excellence Scholarship

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Ross Ryskamp, a mechanical and aerospace engineering doctoral student from Woodbridge, Va., received a STEM Mountains of Excellence Scholarship from the Office of Graduate Education and Life at WVU.

The scholarships, valued at $5,000, are awarded to incoming doctoral students planning to engage in research in one of the following Mountains of Excellence areas: Achieving international leadership in radio astronomy, utilizing shale gas, promoting stewardship of water resources, improving science, technology, engineering and math education and scientific literacy, and eliminating health disparities in Appalachia.

Ryskamp will research how shale gas can be utilized in internal combustion engines efficiently and in an environmentally responsible manner. He received both his bachelor's and master's degrees from WVU, where he focused on facets of engine performance and exhaust emissions. Now, he is researching an advanced combustion mode called reactivity controlled compression ignition, which substitutes natural gas for a portion of diesel fuel while limiting harmful exhaust emissions.

His recent research projects include developing and calibrating a dual fuel natural gas/diesel retrofit system for heavy duty diesel engines, developing a modern spark-ignited natural gas fuel injection system and performing Environmental Protection Agency certification of light-duty bi-fuel (natural gas and gasoline) vehicles.

Gregory Thompson, associate professor in the Department of Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering, nominated Ryskamp. Thompson, who researches fuel additives to reduce the environmental impact of fossil fuel, is Ryskamp's research supervisor.

AUTO REVIEW

BY SUSAN CARPENTER

The Orange County Register (MCT)

The second automaker from the land of wienerschnitzel and doppelbock will soon offer an EV for the kale-and-kombucha crowd. Mercedes-Benz, which began selling its B-Class Electric Drive in July, was priming the pump recently with media test drives at its North American Research and Development campus in Silicon Valley — hoping, perhaps, to skim a few sales from the BMW i3, which arrived at dealers in June.

While it's somewhat ironic that the company credited with inventing the very object now blamed for an impending climate crisis is now pioneering technologies for a zero-emissions future, one thing is for sure: The German car company makes a compelling case for EVs with a luxury vehicle that retains many Mercedes hallmarks and does so at a competitive starting price of $42,375.

Costing less than half as much as a Model S, the B-Class Electric Drive could very well be the poor man's Tesla. Indeed, Mercedes has partnered with the critics' darling on its powertrain. The Electric Drive's 28-kilowatt-hour lithium-ion battery pack and 177-horsepower electric motor are both assembled at Elon Musk's Fremont, Calif., factory, after which they are constructed into complete cars in Germany. Mercedes warranties the battery against defects and capacity declines for eight years or 100,000 miles, whichever comes

The manner in which the batteries are laid out in the car is Tesla-esque. They are spread in a thin layer at the base of the B-Class EV, allowing the rear cargo hold to remain flat and the second seat to accommodate three passengers.

Long available in Europe, the B-Class has only been offered for lease in the U.S. as a hydrogen fuel cell electric vehicle, and only in the L.A. area. The B-Class Electric Drive is an updated second generation, optimized for electrification with a taller, battery-accommodating floor. That's most noticeable from the seats, which feel tall for a compact.

Mercedes claims a range of 85 miles per charge. In the morning I drove the car, it had a projected range of 80 miles, fully charged, and it used that range at a rate of 1.1 miles for every true mile driven.

Mercedes-Benz B-Class electric doesn't skimp on luxury

Anyone who's spent any time driving an EV understands how non-linear its range prediction can be. Like any car, how far it travels on a given amount of fuel depends on how it is driven, but EVs are sensitive to speed and hills. With the Mercedes Electric Drive, drivers have more options for control.

In addition to a button that toggles between full-torque sport mode and range-extending eco, there are steering-wheel paddles. Instead of the paddles controlling up and down shifts, however, they let drivers manually adjust the amount of regenerative braking, and thus the kinetic energy that's captured from slowing and returned to the battery to propel the car. The Cadillac ELR uses a similar system.

What's most impressive about the B-Class, however, is how much it retains the feel of a real Mercedes.

The ride quality is solid, its steering firm, the cabin so quiet I couldn't even hear the whir of the electric motor. A leather interior is standard, as are safety features such as active parking assist and forward collision avoidance. Then there are the Mercedesisms, such as the Harman/Kardon stereo; the seat-shaped seat adjustment on each front door; the knurled knobs for the audio. climate and screen controls; and the soft-release doors on the center console cubbies.

I've driven every pure electric car on the market, from the Tesla Model S and Roadster to the nowdefunct Coda, the Chevy Spark EV, the Fiat 500e, the BMW i3, the Nissan Leaf and now the Mercedes-Benz B-Class Electric Drive. I'm a single mom and a journalist, so my aspirations are more modest. I can say that the Mercedes offers the most luxurious EV experience one can buy without getting a Tesla.

That said, there is a down side to the Mercedes: It lacks a fastcharging port. With the built-in level 2, at least it fully recharges in just 3.5 hours.

Rush Run honors fallen 4-Her

THE INAUGURAL ANNUAL Rush 5K Run/Walk is being hosted by the Monongalia County 4-H Teen Leaders in memory of one of our own, Sydney Rush.

Sydney was a brilliant pink star, shining on everyone around her. She was an outstanding 4-Her and was a true example of "Making the Best Better," which is the 4-H motto. She was loved by many, especially her 4-H family.

Sydney attended Clay-Batelle High School and was a state track champ and a member of the school's state championship cheerleading squad, as well as a 4-H member, a Young Life youth and much more. In September 2013, she was involved in a fatal car accident on her way home from a youth event.

The Monongalia County 4-H Teen Leaders wanted to honor her by hosting an event she would have loved. Proceeds will benefit a scholarship fund, being established in Sydney's honor, for youth to return to 4-H camps.

Because of the overwhelming response and donations, four scholarships (two at older camp and two at younger camp) were provided this year and will cover the cost of county camp for those who received them at camp next year. Those receiving the scholarships were Ashley Rackley, Paris Vennis, Sloan Parker and Scout Spong. The teen leaders will wear pink in Syd's honor at the Rush Run, so please join us and put your pink on.

Race details

The 2014 Rush Run 5K will begin at Hazel Ruby McQuain Amphitheatre at the Wharf at 7:30 p.m. Aug. 8. The course will begin at the amphitheater and continue on the Decker's Creek Trail toward Marilla Park and then return.

The deadline for early registration is today at $20. Registrations received after today will have a fee of $30. Note that all online registrations will include an additional $2.50 credit card processing fee. Only early registrants are guaranteed a T-shirt. All others will be based on availability.

For information on Rush Run or for volunteer opportunities, contact us at rushrun5k@gmail.com, or on Facebook at rushrun5k.

This year at older camp, 4-H campers were provided a pink 4-H camp T-shirt in memory of Sydney, which we all wore proudly. We are asking race participants to wear pink to the race in memory of Sydney. Also at camp, a flag retirement ceremony was planned and implemented by our 4-H charting class. A new flag was dedicated in memory of Sydney and will be flown at all of our 4-H camps. The flag that was dedicated was flown at the U.S. Capitol in memory of Sydney on her birthday.

Fair exhibits

We have quickly changed pace from camp to fairs, and I encourage each of you to visit a fair in Monongalia County in support of the hard work our 4-H members put into their 4-H projects.

Four-Hers select projects at the beginning of the year that relate to an interest of theirs. At the end of the 4-H year, members create an exhibit to show at the fair and are recognized with a ribbon for their hard work. Four-H members will display their projects and livestock at the Battelle District Fair the week of July 22-26, the Monongalia County Fair the week of July 28-Aug. 2, and the Clay District Fair the week of Aug. 12-16. Please join me in congratulating our young people who have put in a lot of work to learn a new skill through the 4-H program. If you have any questions about the above events or the 4-H program, contact me at 304-291-7201, or Becca. Fint-Clark@mail.wvu.edu.

Cover Story

One season, one crime

TNT keeps audiences guessing with 'Murder in the First'

By Jacqui Wiens

TV Media

rime intrigues audiences like noth-Ling else on television. The wildly successful "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation" and its various spinoffs catapulted the genre into a new era of popularity that has yet to subside.

The police procedural has seen some evolution since it appeared, and each new series tries to put a spin on the basic format. Typically, each season is broken down into more or less selfcontained episodes that follow one crime and its resolution before the next episode.

TNT is trying out something unorthodox with its original series "Murder in the First," which follows the investigation of one crime for an entire season, reflecting a more realistic time frame. Catch a new episode Monday, July 21, on TNT.

It's a bold move, and it seems to be paying off for the network. The premiere episode of "Murder in the First" drew in an impressive 4.9 million viewers over the course of two airings, making it the network's most successful series premiere in two years. With a score of 68 out of 100 based on critic reviews on metacritic. com, it seems that the professional audience is digging the format.

(On the other hand, the website had two incredibly different viewer reviews as of press time with one user giving the show a 10/10 and the other rating it a big fat zero with the main complaint seeming to be prevalent nudity.)

"Murder in the First" stars Taye Diggs ("Private Practice") and Kathleen Robertson ("Beverly Hills, 90210") as San Francisco homicide detectives Terry English and Hildy > is revealed that Det. English's wife has been suffering from pancreatic cancer and is on death's doorstep. Diggs aives life to English's

Tom Felton as seen in

'Murder in the First'

Mulligan. As the

struggle to keep his emotions under wraps in a high stress environment as the most precious thing in his life slips slowly away.

English's partner, Det. Mulligan, is a divorced, single mother trying to balance the challenges of her demanding career as well as the challenges of having a preteen daughter. When Mulligan sees English struggling with personal problems, she steps in and sends him home to his wife.

"Murder in the First" begins as English and Mulligan head out to investigate a shooting in a drug den in San Francisco's Tenderloin District. They eventually discover that their victim, Kevin Nyers, is the biological father of tech prodigy Erich Blunt, portrayed by the Harry Potter franchise's Tom Felton. Blunt is the CEO of APPLSN, a Silicon Valley startup dedicated to bringing immersive apps to the masses. The show gives Blunt a Mark Zuckerberg vibe, and it is quickly revealed that he is being sued for allegedly stealing a former employee's work.

After a meeting with the plaintiff in question, a visibly agitated Blunt returns to his private jet. When his young flight attendant (with whom he may or may not be having an affair) spills wine on his shirt, Blunt fires her in a less-than-kind manner. Although he apparently had a change of heart and hired her back, Blunt's recently fired flight attendant is found dead in her home, turning the detectives' sights on the young CEO. As the investigation continues, it seems that Blunt is the obvious suspect. Keep in mind, however, that the entire 10episode season focuses on the original murder. Many police procedurals have proven successful in setting up one plot line at the start of the show, only to reveal the conclusion by the end of the episode. "Murder in the First" will have more room to set up and flesh out false leads than its predecessors. Throughout production, in fact, the actors were kept in the dark about the eventual resolution.

Speaking with "Paste Magazine," Tom Felton said: "I'm pleased to say that, even as the character, I didn't know until the very last minute. They were very keen not to share the information with us, and it's definitely a ... roller-coaster of a ride."

'Food Fighters' mixes cooking competition with game-show fun

By Cassie Dresch

TV Media

When it comes to cooking, a chef's signature recipe is as unique as a fingerprint. They know how to put it together just right to make it the perfect culinary masterpiece and something that is unrivaled by most.

But what happens when you take part cooking show and part game show and throw them in the blender? Why, you get NBC's newest formula for a cooking competition that looks ripe for the pick-

Hosted by "Man v. Food's" Adam Richman, "Food Fighters" will pit one ace amateur cook's signature dish against six professional chefs in the ultimate high-stakes food battle. Catch the series premiere Tuesday, July 22, on NBC.

The home cook and the professional chefs will all be cooking one dish — the recipe our dear amateur chef has claimed to be their best. It's a move that makes this culinary game show all the more interesting.

"Every true home cook has at least one 'signature dish,' — the peach cobbler, the lasagna, that appetizer that friends beg you to bring to parties," said NBC president of alternative and late night programming Paul Telegdy. "This is a show that puts those recipes to the ultimate test and rewards the passion Americans bring to their home kitchens every day."

Armed only with their recipe and three culinary "lifelines," the home cooks will face off against the professionals one at a time. When they're both finished creating their dish, the meals will be put in front of "The Dinner Party." Consisting of renowned culinary experts, "The Dinner Party" will perform a blind taste test and decide which dish is the

If the home cook's dish is chosen as the winner, they'll knock off the first chef and claim a cash prize. They'll be able to face off against the next chef and climb a money ladder with increasing cash prizes for each professional they beat out. Of course, if the professional wins, the battle is over.

It's a refreshing new format on the classic cooking competition show, and Richman is the perfect food guru to serve

Growing up in the Big Apple, Richman was raised with a passion for food and a love for diverse culinary delights. It was a passion that never died, even as he pursued an undergraduate degree in international studies in Georgia. He kept a regular food journal and eventually began touring restaurants all over the

He got his own show, "Man v. Food," on Travel Channel in 2008, and his career on television took off from there. Of course, he has a great deal of respect for the amateur chef and is thrilled to host "Food Fighters."

"I'm beyond excited to be ... part of a show that gives the unsung heroes of culinary arts — the everyday home cooks — their chance to shine on the national stage, and have a chance at winning some serious, life-changing money," Richman said. "I've always loved traveling and meeting great, passionate, every day, food-loving people and sampling their creations. To have the opportunity to put them on equal footing with the pros and to give them their recognition and a shot at glory is literally the icing on

It's a show that's sure to whet your appetite, and this cooking show-game show mashup is ready to get sizzling. Catch the series premiere of "Food Fighters," airing Tuesday, July 22, on NBC.

Bean there, done that

Sean Bean's 'legend' lives on in a new drama from TNT

By Cassie Dresch

TV Media

Bean there, done that: It looks like Sean Bean is alive and well once again.

The actor — who is perhaps infamously known for playing characters who die frequently — has made a bit of a legendary comeback in a new drama series entitled "Legends," premiering Wednesday, Aug. 13, on TNT.

The show stars Bean ("Game of Thrones") as an undercover FBI agent named Martin Odum, who works for the Deep Cover Operations (DCO) division. He has an uncanny ability to transform himself into different personas — which become his "legends" when he's done with them — for different jobs, but he meets a mysterious stranger who simply asks him, "Who are you?"

As Martin struggles with questions about his own identity, he still needs to continue working in his primary job, and he takes on legends such as a Scottish soccer club executive, a legendary computer hacker and a corrupt Chicago police officer.

"This is certainly something I'm looking forward to sinking my teeth into, the different personas," Bean told reporters at WonderCon back in April. "It's every actor's dream to play different characters. It's a bit weird, really ... Like, last week, I played three characters in one day. But it's OK, because you have time to adjust." Based on the novel of the same name by award-winning author Robert Littell, the show also stars Ali Larter ("Heroes") as another FBI agent who has a history with Martin and Amber Valletta ("Revenge") as Martin's ex-wife.

It still remains to be seen if Bean's character, Martin, will reach an untimely end or not. You can check it out for yourself when "Legends" premieres Wednesday, Aug. 13, on TNT, but when he spoke at WonderCon and was finally asked the question on everyone's minds, he responded with a laugh, "I'm alive so far!"

Sparking revenge: He may be most well known for his best-selling romance novels, but now Nicholas Sparks is taking his talents to the small

made-for-TV movie that marks Sparks' television debut as an executive producer, and the two-hour programming event will premiere Saturday, Sept. 13, on Lifetime.

It's an exciting treat for fans of Sparks' work, and while I'm sure there will be at least one scene in the rain, "Deliverance Creek" is being chalked up as a revenge drama more so than a romance.

The story focuses on Belle Gatlin Barlowe (Lauren Ambrose, "Six Feet Under"), a widow and mother of three struggling to defend her land during the Civil War. She's up against the corrupt bank that runs her town, and they're forcing her to become an outlaw. But as the stakes get higher and more personal, Belle starts to question whether it's better to be good or to survive.

Even though Sparks' name is attached to the project as a producer, it'll be Melissa Carter — writer of the Brittany Murphy/Ron Livingston romcom "Little Black Book" (2004) — penning the script and Jon Amiel of "The Borgias" sitting in the director's chair.

Lifetime is currently coining "Deliverance Creek" as a two-hour special event, however many publications — including "Deadline" and "The Hollywood Reporter" — are referring to this TV movie as a backdoor pilot. If it does well enough with audiences, it may very well be turned into a full TV series with Sparks at

tive producer.

Organizers mark 10 years of MountainFest

[Martin] said MountainFest

consisting of up to 80 local old-fashioned cars.

Commemorative wall among special features

BY TOM TERRAROSA

The Dominion Post

Bikers across the state are gearing up for the MountainFest motorcycle rally.

The festival is scheduled for Wednesday-July 27, and for most people, it may seem like any other year. But for MountainFest coordinator Cliff Sutherland, it's a special event.

This July will mark the 10th year of the MountainFest rally. Sutherland said the team is pulling out all the stops, including something special to commemorate the date.

MountainFest will feature its regular fun-filled festivities and host a variety of vivacious vendors outside, but just inside the doors of the Hazel and J.W. Ruby Community Center at Mylan Park, a collage of all things years past is sure to attract rally regulars.

Sutherland said a commemorative wall will be put up, displaying band T-shirts, posters, photographs, national and local media cutouts and other MountainFest memorabilia.

He said he even has signed guitars from a number of the bands that rocked the stage each year at the annual event.

Sutherland said the display will help paint a picture for people, illustrating just how far MountainFest has come in 10 years.

For the most part, everything people have come to know and love at Mountainfest will still be available.

Vendors from motorcycle painters to stereo system experts to custom parts dealers will be in attendance. Sutherland said the vendor booths will be set up a bit differently this year for better crowd access.

Funnel cakes, hot dogs, pizzas, burgers and cotton candy are just some of the delectable foods attendees can chow down on in the hours leading up to the mulwall will be put up, displaying band titude of stunt shows or band perfor-T-shirts, posters, photographs, national mances.

Sutherland said MountainFest gets better every year, and this year is no different. He explained that there will be a few new additions sprinkled in among the same good-old-fashioned fun that crowds have come to expect from the annual bike rally.

The aerial stunt show will be a nix this year due to a scheduling conflict, according to MountainFest Board Member Mike Alexander.

Instead, a sportbike stunt show will be put on by the Swoop Production Stunt Team. Alexander said the crew is a surface-based stunt team that does trick motorcycle riding in enclosed, paved areas of 250 feet by 50 feet.

A fan favorite will be back again this year at MountainFest: The Ives Brothers' Wall of Death.

A new addition to the MountainFest rally will be waiting inside, according to Board Member Bruce Martin.

Martin said the custom bike builders asked to move outside this year, making room indoors for a special event.

He said MountainFest will hold a vintage car show consisting of up to 80 local old-fashioned cars.

Drivers were asked to submit photos and applications by July 11 in order to be invited to the show. Martin said the invitation-only process was adopted for space reasons.

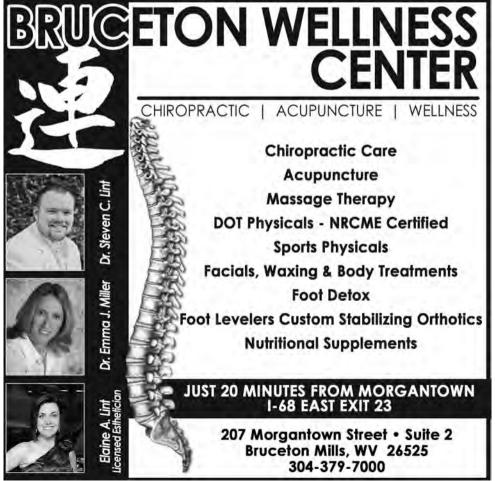

"We didn't want to have 150 sign up and not be able to take them," he explained.

Participants donated $35 and in return they will receive a plaque, a reception thrown by the Convention of Visitors Bureau and two passes to MountainFest, including parking.

Morgan of Morgantown is sponsoring the car show, and while no cars will be judged by officials, there will be cash prizes given for peoples' choice awards.

Martin said the number of peoples' choice awards depends on the number of cars that take part in the show. There will be at least one prize and possibly up to three.

Nugent, Big & Rich among acts set to perform

Organizers spend a lot of time lining up bands for rally

BY TOM TERRAROSA

The Dominion Post

It takes a lot of work to book a bigname musical act for a motorcycle rally, according to MountainFest coordinator Cliff Sutherland.

In order to get any idea of who you are going to have come show time, you have to let bands know you're interested well in advance, he said.

Sutherland, who is gearing up for this week's MountainFest, is already working on booking entertainment for the 2015 festival.

He said there are two ways to book bigname entertainment for rallies like MountainFest: Pay the price — the big price — or wait it out and negotiate until the band has events booked in close proximity to yours around the same time as yours, and then the price goes down.

Nugent

Cowboy Troy

Sutherland said MountainFest has made some serious progress through 10 years, but it isn't at the point where they can afford to wait it out too long.

He explained that MountainFest has to be able to have some reasonable time to market their big-name acts, and in order to do that, they have to book them ahead of time.

"Your best price is if you wait, but we can't wait," he said. "We're not the Ozzy Osbourne festival in Florida that he has every year, where if you're a fan of hard rock, you're going.

You know [big name bands] are going to be there. We're not there yet."

MountainFest books bands ahead of time so they can let potential rallygoers and rock enthusiasts know who's going to be there.

This year, the lineup at MountainFest

SEE MUSIC, 9

Big & Rich is a country music duo composed of Big Kenny and John Rich, both of whom are songwriters, vocalists and guitarists. The group will perform Saturday at MountainFest with special guest Cowboy Troy.

has bands that each have a solid, loyal following.

"We have a few big bands," Sutherland said. "It all depends who you are, which one's the bigger one because all three of them are pretty big draws to their own audience."

Between the main stage and the feature stage, several bands and talented acts are ready to entertain fans this week:

On Thursday. Jackal with Jesse James Dupree will take the stage. Sutherland said Jackal is a hardworking band that leaves everything on the stage. He said MountainFest beer sales may be the highest on Thursday night simply because of Jackal's performance, and oneday ticket sales may be high, as well, due to the band's loyal following.

■ Friday, the legendary Ted Nugent will headline on the main stage, while Jamiah on Fire & the Red Machine will play on the feature stage. Jamiah on Fire & the Red Machine is a Jimi Hendrix tribute band that is a must-see, Sutherland said.

■ One of the biggest names MountainFest has to offer this year will take the main stage Saturday night: Big and Rich with special guest Cowboy Troy.

Many other acts are set to play on one of two stages this weekend, including: the Hillbilly Gypsies, Kashmir, Chris Janson, Geneva, Marshall Lowry and Nick Sturms.

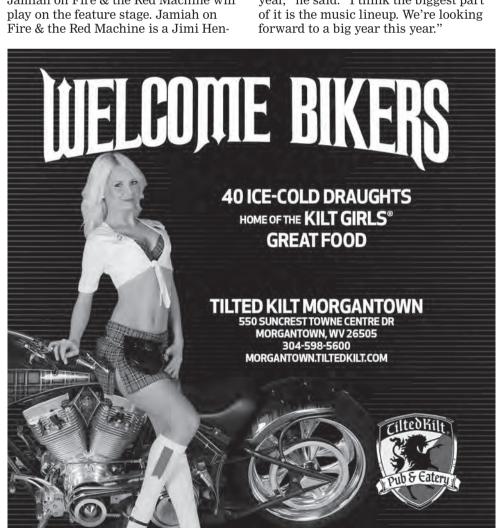

MountainFest Board Member Mike

Alexander said he is pretty happy how the lineup turned

"You ask a lot of questions, and a lot of people get mentioned," he said of the selection process. Mike Alexander "It's a constant dis-MountainFest board member cussion among board members about (musical) acts."

Alexander said Sutherland usually makes the final calls on the artists chosen, and this year's lineup was definitely a solid one.

"Ticket sales are up considerably this year," he said. "I think the biggest part of it is the music lineup. We're looking forward to a big year this year."
