Feds recognize same-sex marriage in W.Va.

Spouses will now be able to receive federal benefits

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The federal government recognizes gay marriage in six states and extends federal benefits to those couples, Attorney General Eric Holder announced Saturday.

Gay marriage became legal in Alaska, Arizona, Idaho, North Carolina, West Virginia and Wyoming.

government's The nouncement follows

U.S. Supreme Court's decision this month to decline to hear appeals from five states that sought to keep their marriage bans in place. It brings the total number of states with federal recognition of gay marriage to plus the District of Columbia.

Couples married in these states will qualify for a range of federal benefits, including Social Security and veterans'

"With each new state where same-sex marriages are legalrecognized, our nation moves closer to achieving full equality for all Americans," Holder said.

The attorney general said the government is working "as quickly as possible" to make sure same-sex married couples in these states receive the "fullest array of benefits" that federal law allows.

The Justice Department also has determined that it can legally recognize gay marriages performed during the summer in Indiana and Wisconsin after federal courts declared marriage bans in the states unconstitutional. Subsequent developments created confusion about the status of those unions, but Holder said the U.S. government will recognize the marriages.

Rising costs making it harder to operate

As a volunteer firefighter with more than 40 years experience, Blacksville Fire Chief Bob Brookover has seen his share of tough situations.

As the president of the Monongalia County Volunteer Fire Companies' Association (VFCA), he fears what the future holds for the 12 unpaid volunteer fire departments that respond to every call outside Morgantown's city limits. "Up to this point, the people in this county have had really excellent fire protection and for a very low price. But I really, honestly believe that in two to three years, if things do not change for the fire departments, you're going to see a few of them closing their doors,' Brookover said. The concern stems from the rising cost of keeping those doors open.

Dems face test in state House races

ELECTION 2014

Associated Press

CHARLESTON — Lawsuits, big spending and disgust with President Barack Obama all factor into Democrats' toughest election in 85 straight years of running the West Virginia House of Delegates.

All 100 seats on the ballot and House Democrats have a six-seat edge over Republicans. With a GOP candidate for almost every slot, the party hopes voter disapproval of the president trickles down the entire ballot.

In 2012, all 55 counties voted against Obama, whose push to cut carbon emissions from coal-fired power plants is highly unpopular in the major coalproducing state.

House Democrats' "record is one that very much reflects the same misjudgments and values that the Obama administration has tried to put in place across the country," said House Minority Leader Tim Armstead, R-Kanawha.

Democrats contend their party doesn't align with Obama. They point to making recent cuts in grocery and corporate taxes, and tax breaks on alternative fuel cars. They say they're fighting Washington on Appalachian coal, a struggling industry also facing serious market and geological limitations.

Democrats have a 24-10 edge in the Senate, but Republicans look to cut the lead in a few races.

So far, statehouse candidates have spent more than $4 million in the 2014 election cycle, according to the secretary of state's website. Outside groups have spent $1.7 million on statehouse election messaging.

Honest West Virginians, using about $900,000 from unions, spent more than $606,000 protecting Democrats. The PAC ads tie state GOP candidates to the billionaire businessmen Koch brothers, whose affiliates have spent millions in West Virginia attacking Democratic U.S. Rep. Nick Rahall.

unraveled in her decaying Louisiana mansion while black-and-white movie unspooled.

The decorations in Janice and Mark's Morgantown abode would never get an "R" rating for gore.

As said, it's strictly camp, using things Janice has either collected or her friends have given her over the years for gifts.

Her friend, Jennifer Forester, said Alfred Hitchcock would have envied the endeavor.

"It doesn't matter where you are in the house," she said. "Something's going to jump out at you. Janice and Mark definitely have the best Halloween party in town."

And that's what it's really about, Janice said, as she leaned on the coffee table — sorry, that's "coffin table," what with that skeleton doing an eternal slumber underneath the glass top.

The clinical side of saying, "Boo"

"I like having Halloween parties and getting together for the movies," she said.

"I like seeing my friends having fun. And it is fun being scared."

That's why Halloween, and the movies it spawns, are so popular, Purdue researcher and communications specialist Glenn Sparks said.

It's called the "excitation transfer process," he said.

When you watch the movie or tour the haunted house, the heart rate and spikes adrenaline jacks.

The positive side of being with friends for the fright only intensifies the experience, he said.

Janice laughed and said she didn't know how positive her experience was with Ms. Davis back in front of the TV in the living room of her childhood home at Wiles Hill.

She didn't wake her mom up, she said. But it wasn't easy.

"It was a long night."

WVU

areas, he said.

Like FallFest, he said: WVU's traditional welcome-back concert in the fall, as opposed to the partying on Grant Avenue that used to herald the start of the semester.

Charity, not chaos, would rule, he said.

A donation to a worthy cause, for example, could get your match that you would put to a couch for a very controlled burn, he said.

Same for a sledgehammer and a car snagged from a junkyard for the occasion.

He was thinking about it Saturday afternoon, as he and others in town got ready to watch No. 22 WVU line up against Oklahoma State, on the road.

The Mountaineers corralled the Cowbovs 34-10 in that contest, spoiling OSU's Homecoming in Stillwater.

WVU's win the week before — a surprise 41-27 upset against then-No. 4 Baylor at home, was spoiled, Rockwell said, when post-game partying in Sunnyside spilled over to downtown Morgantown in the hours after that final musket shot at Milan Puskar Stadium.

Dumpsters and couches were set on fire. Lampposts were toppled. And police cars were pelted with rocks and bottles.

Morgantown officials set the tab for the cleanup and equipment repairs at $45,000. This past week, WVU expelled three students for their actions after the game — with more likely to follow.

Accountability is one thing, Rockwell said, but a speeding locomotive can't stop on a dime.

That's why he proposed what he proposed Saturday. Taking WVU's for-better-or-worse post-game traditions and roping them off is better than students just taking to the streets after the game, he said.

"You're never shake the 'party school' image," he said, "but you might keep the arrests down."

Couching the debate

Arrests are what Sameera Abu-Ghannam, a WVU graduate student from northern Virginia, was thinking about Saturday.

She didn't appreciate the mob mentality that ensued after the game, she said.

"I agree that something has to be done," said the student, who also earned her undergraduate degree from the university.

Abu-Ghannam couldn't help wonder, though, if students — because of the mob mentality — weren't baited a bit by the martial presence that mobilized into the evening.

She wondered, though officers and other responders had to protect themselves, as well as property, if a more-tempered response could have quelled the crowd a little better.

"You had officers showing up in SWAT gear," she said.

Carpenter, Justin though, said he knows how to bench the SWAT team on any given Saturday.

You do that, the political science major from Canton, Ohio, said, by behaving after the game. Which is what the majority of fans, students and others, generally do, he said.

That's why he's in favor of expelling any student caught in engaging in criminal behavior after the Baylor game.

"I support what the university is doing," he said.

"I don't think a small minority should dictate the proceedings at my school."

Some costs are covered by funding from the state ($40,000) and county ($20,000). The rest falls to the volunteers to raise. Brookover said it costs about $90,000 to $100,000 a year to keep Blacksville open as one of the county's smaller departments.

"I really don't know the layman's concept. If he thinks the fire department has everything given to them," Brookover said. "Please don't get me wrong, the money we get from the state and the county is very much appreciated, and it does help, but the time has come that somebody has got to step up and say 'we've got to help these folks.' 'We've got to help them or we're going to Assistant Prosecutor Phil Magro initially told the commission that the proposal would need to go before the voters. When a second opinion was requested, the proposal went to Prosecutor Marcia Ashdown in May.

This month, Ashdown returned an opinion explaining that the creation of a separate fire fee would have to follow the creation of a county fire board to direct the funds.

Ashdown's response prompted the scheduling of a work session between VFCA members and the commission slated for Nov. 5.

Bloom said that Ashdown's opinion presented a number of questions that need to be answered. He also said that the commission is ultimately accountable for the county's funds. "I think the fire depart-

"The main thing is, once you're talking about county funds, there is going to be accountability. We're not just going to hand county funds over to anyone without a full financial accounting."

"We want funeral directors to keep conversations focused on legacy," said Saari, whose privately held company launched five months ago. "What was important to the deceased? What was symbolic of a life, a dream, the

Ice Age human settlements found in the Peruvian Andes

BY AMINA KHAN

Los Angeles Times (MCT)

Archaeologists they've found the highestknown remains of Ice Age human settlements in the southern Peruvian Andes, dated to more than 12,000 years old. The two sites, described in the journal Science, sit higher than 4,000 meters (more than 13,100 feet) above sea level and indicate that humans may have adapted to the extremely harsh climate far sooner than many researchers had expected. "These sites extend the residence time of humans above 4,000 (meters above sea level) by nearly a millennium," the study authors wrote, "implying more moderate lateglacial Andean environments and greater physiological capabilities for Pleistocene humans than previously assumed."

The two sites in the Pucuncho Basin lie nearly 3,000 feet above other settlements from around the same time period. One, called Pucuncho, is a workshop site filled with 260 formal tools such as stone scrapers and projecpoints; it sits 14,288 feet above sea level and has been dated to 12,800 to 11,500 years ago. The second, Cuncaicha, hosts a rock shelter sitting 14,698 feet above sea level that dates back 12,400 years and a workshop site 14,583 feet above sea level. The shelter is filled with soot-marked ceilings from campfires, rock art and sediments on the ground that include charred plant remains.

Cuncaicha was also with ceramics, chipped-stone tools, animal bones, bone beads and quartz crystals, as well as red ochre fragments. Most of the stone tools were made from the obsidian, andesite and jasper found nearby.

Study: Headache condition linked to weight-loss surgery

BY MELISSA HEALY Los Angeles Times (MCT)

By reshaping the gastrointestinal bariatric surgery appears to set in motion a cascade of physiological changes most obviously weight loss. But a new study suggests that such surgery may also be linked, in rare cases, to a headache condition caused by a leak of cerebrospinal fluid from the brain.

Neurologists generally diagnose spontaneous intracranial hypotension, which can bring on sudden headaches and nausea in tall, lanky people. But research published this week in the journal Neu*rology* found, in searching through the medical records of some 338 patients with the condition, 11 — or 3.3 percent — had bariatric surgery.

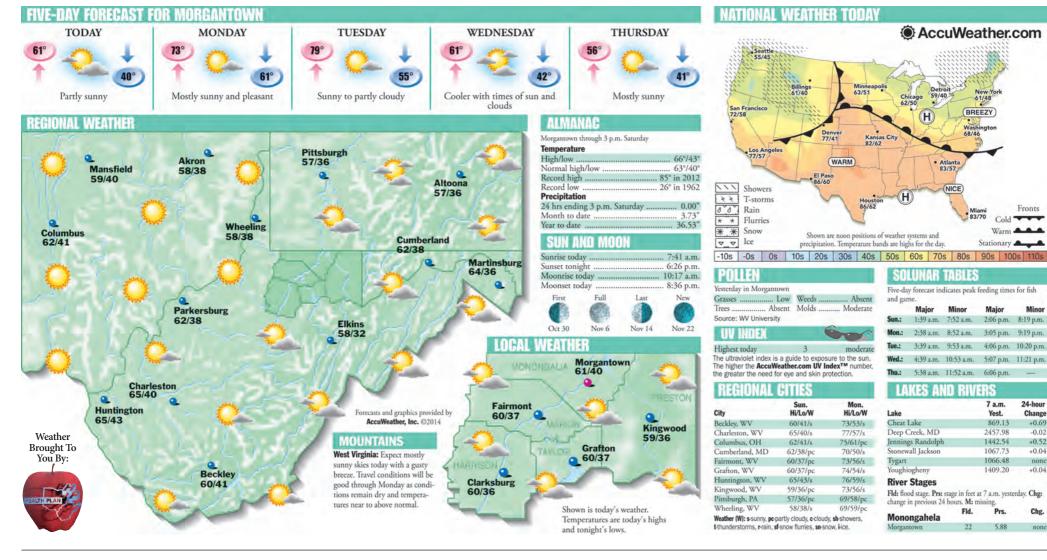

That suggests that a history of weight-loss surgery may put a person at increased risk of developing these headaches. While lying down often causes the symptoms to disappear, the condition can be disabling.

On average, bariatric while a person is upright, patients who developed the painful condition did so anywhere from three months to close to five years after the surgery, and after they had lost, on average, about 116 pounds.

Evidence is finding that bariatric surgery prompts physiological changes in patients that are not just a downstream effect of weight loss: Improvement in a metabolic function — and resolution of Type 2 diabetes — is at the top of that list.

Man's super cleanliness may set bar too high

DEAR ABBY: A wonderful man, "Frank," said he was interested in developing a relationship. The problem? He is a super neat freak. A person could live in his garage — it's that clean. When there is a delivery to his house, he makes the delivery people remove their shoes before entering.

I'm neat, but not to that extreme. When I'm at Frank's house, I am on pins and needles if I leave a glass on a table that might leave a ring. Frank has never said anything, but I wonder what he's thinking.

When he comes to my apartment, I notice his 360-degree gaze around the rooms. Another possible problem — he has no interest in culture or the arts. Am I right in seeing more minuses than pluses in such a relationship? — NEAT ENOUGH IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR NEAT ENOUGH: If what you want from the relationship is just friendship, I don't see a problem. If you're looking for more than that, then I'm afraid my answer is yes — to which I'll add one more "minus": Your inability to discuss your misgivings with him.

DEAR ABBY: A new family moved down the street. They have two young kids who take the bus with my son.

What is annoying to me is their daughters are always late for the bus, which makes the bus late to school. Should I say something or let it go?

In all the years my son has taken the bus, this is the first time this has happened. Thanks for the advice. — LATE FOR SCHOOL IN OHIO

DEAR LATE: Talk to your son's teacher, because his tardiness to class could reflect poorly on his grades.

The teacher — or school principal might send a note to the parents "reminding" them that children must be in their classrooms by a certain time, that the bus schedule is fixed and cannot be adjusted to accommodate each student, and if it continues to happen, the driver will have to leave without their daughters.

2 thumbs up for canceling TLC's Honey Boo-Boo

I was writing a news story when suddenly the noise on my laptop that signals "incoming messages" filled my ears.

Good grief, I thought. Is that my email? Did someone just send out a bazillion pieces of junk mail?

I switched over to my work email. No new messages.

Gmail?

Nope.

As it turns out, it was my Facebook feed that was going wacko. Please, not another post-game riot, I prayed. To my relief, that wasn't the cause of the social media ruckus.

Nor was it another Ebola case. It was not, thank God, another ISIS attack.

Not bad news about a family member, or notice of a new baby. No, none of my worst- or best-case scenarios were happening. Something else, something completely unexpected, had my friends posting like maniacs. TLC cancelled "Here Comes Honey Boo-Boo.'

That was the big news. "This can't be happening," one friend lamented.

"There must be something we can do to stop this," another replied.

I expected those comments when the show began, knowing my friends, not when it was canceled. But my friends are not the issue here — though they may be in a subsequent column.

No, the problem here is that Honey Boo-Boo's mama is allegedly dating a known sex offender.

TLC doesn't want anything to do with him. So, so long, Honey Boo-Boo Timing is everything, right? And now that Honey Boo-Boo's mother is allegedly involved with a recently released sex offender, by all means, let's roll up the cable and take all the cameras away. Huh?

Not that I'm advocating for the continued exploitation of a family, or that TLC continue to treat us to this train wreck of a family. But I have to wonder, isn't this the perfect time to have the little girl and her sisters under close scrutiny?

After all, the man was convicted of aggravated child molestation. Mama June Shannon said she dated him 10 years ago, but isn't dating him now.

Somehow, that doesn't reassure me or TLC for that matter.

In fact, nothing about that family is reassuring. And when I think about all the young "stars' that have been through the Disney machine and how many of their careers and lives have ended badly, I really start to worry about a little girl I've never met. But it is all about the kids, isn't it, TLC?

Color me not reassured.

She immediately snagged it, sorted it and packed for distribution to needy families during the holidays.

"It makes you feel good to be able to help," the WVU student from Toms River, N.J., said.

"It does make a difference," she said.

That's why she and her fellow members of WVU's Sports and Exercise Physiology Club were doing all that sorting at the mall.

They were part of the effort behind "Make a Difference Day," which is fronted annually by

Water funds at risk

Preston project seeks $1M OK

BY MICHELLE WOLFORD

The Dominion Post

KINGWOOD — More than $2 million in funding for a Rowlesburg water extension project is in jeopardy unless an additional $1 million grant is approved.

Rowlesburg Mayor Barbara Banister said the project, which would extend the town's water service south of town to the Tucker County line, began in 1999, but stalled when the town had its own water issues.

Those issues have been resolved, she said, "and in 2012, those people came to council again," Banister said. The town now has the water supply to serve the additional customers, she said. It's just a matter of putting in a storage tank and laying pipe. The line would run from W.Va. 72 where it meets U.S. 50 to Etam and the Tucker County line.

Banister said she met with Robbie Queen, Gov. Earl Ray Tomblin's senior staff member, on Oct. 21, to discuss the project.

Also at the meeting were representatives of the Region VI Planning and Development Council, Clay Riley, of Thrasher Engineering, Delegate Randy Smith, R-Preston, and West Virginia senators Bob Williams, D-Taylor, and Dave Sypolt, R-Preston.

The representatives are all on board for the project, Banister said, and will write letters of support.

Some funding is in place — a $1.5 million loan with a 1 percent interest rate, and a $1 million grant, both from the West Virginia Infrastructure and Job Development Council (IJDC). But the remaining money, $1 million in a Small Cities Block Grant (SCBG), requires the governor's approval.

The project was submitted in 2013, but was not approved. Without the additional funding, the IJDC money could go away. "Some of the other moneys will expire next year if the project isn't fully funded ... if they don't use it," Williams said.

"It's certainly a worth-while project," he said. "These people are in desperate need of water — they've been hauling water for years," he said. Some have had their water go bad; for others, their wells are dry.

"They're hauling water for household use and for drinking," Williams said.

He said the process of obtaining SCBGs can take a couple of years.

"The issue is there may be $40 million or $50 million worth of requests and only $10 million available."

In Rowlesburg, he said, "there is a need and it is a good project. And this is the second year they've applied."

The process involves projects being ranked by the state Development Office and presented to the governor for approval.

Williams said he'll write a letter of support for the project. Smith said he will, too.

"I think their chances are pretty good this year," Smith said, "because they were turned down last year. They did everything right, and they have been patient." The way the project was presented to Queen made clear "this wasn't just a case of convenience but necessity."

Banister said more than 100 households have asked to be included in the project, and those households may represent more than 300 people. If the funding is approved, they could have town water within about a year. Williams said Tomblin's decision should come in December or January cember or January.

"We're going to send letters and get the federal representatives involved," Smith said. "This isn't about politics. It's about people who need fresh water."

WHO: Number of Ebola cases passes 10,000

Associated Press

DAKAR, Senegal More than 10,000 people have been infected with Ebola and nearly half of them have died, according to figures released Saturday by the World Health Organization (WHO).

The Ebola epidemic in West Africa is the largest outbreak of the disease with risen to 10,141. Of those casa rapidly rising death toll in Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone. There have also been cases in three other West African countries, Spain and the United States.

The U.N. health agency said Saturday that the number of confirmed, probable and suspected cases has es, 4,922 people have died. Its figures show about 200 new cases since the last report, four days ago.

Even those grisly tolls are likely an underestimate, WHO warns, as many people in the hardest hit countries have been unable or too frightened to seek medical care. A shortage of ties confirmed that the dislabs capable of handling potentially infected blood samples has also made it difficult to track the outbreak. For example, the latest numbers show no change in Liberia's case toll, suggesting the numbers may be lagging behind reality.

On Thursday, authoriease spread to Mali, the sixth West African country affected, and on the same day, a new case was confirmed in New York, in a doctor who recently returned from Guinea.

Mali had long been considered highly vulnerable to the disease, since it shares a border with Guinea. The disease arrived there in a 2-year-old, who traveled with her grandmother by bus from Guinea and died Friday.

The toddler, who was bleeding from her nose during the journey, may have had high-risk contact with many people, WHO warned.

Ebola: N.Y. has guidelines from cases in Dallas

NEW YORK — Talk about a tale of two cities: A Dallas hospital got a pop quiz in Ebola and made an early mistake. New York got a peek at the answer sheet and was better prepared at the start.

The contrast in handling two Ebola diagnoses highlights how differently cities and hospitals prepare for health emergencies.

"The lesson I would take from New York is you have to practice," Dr. Amesh Adalja, a representative of the Infectious Diseases Society of America. "Preparedness isn't something you just make a plan for and put it on the shelf."

Ebola came to New York via a doctor who had volunteered to treat patients in Ebola-stricken Guinea. Dr. Craig Spencer alerted his aid agency that he had developed a fever, and was taken to Bellevue Hospital Center by specially trained emergency workers wearing protective gear.

In Dallas in September, a hospital initially sent home a sick Thomas Eric Duncan, who had traveled from Liberia and who days later would become the nation's first Ebola diagnosis.

Ebola-stricken doc a driven do-gooder

NEW YORK — Dr. Craig Spencer, the physician being treated for Ebola in New York City, is the kind of globe-trotting do-gooder who could walk into a small village in Africa and, even though he didn't know the language, win people over through hugs alone, according to people who worked with him.

Even before leaving for Guinea this summer to fight Ebola with Doctors Without Borders, the 33-year-old amassed an ordinary man's lifetime worth of world travel, much of which was in the service of the poor.

In the past three years alone, Spencer, an attending physician at New York-Presbyterian Hospital/Columbia University Medical Center, had been to Rwanda to work on an emergency care teaching curriculum, volunteered at a health clinic in Burundi, helped investigate an infectious parasitic disease in the Democratic Republic of Congo and traveled to 32 villages in Indonesia to do a public health survey.

"He was never afraid of getting his hands dirty or his feet dirty," said Dr. Deogratias Niyizonkiza, founder of Village Health Works.

Worker criticizes quarantine process

NEWARK, N.J. — The health care worker who was quarantined at a New Jersey hospital because she had contact with Ebola patients in West Africa is sharply criticizing the way her case was handled.

Kaci Hickox, the first traveler quarantined under Ebola watches in New Jersey and New York, gave a first-person account to the Dallas Morning News.

Hickox said she was stopped at Newark Liberty International and was questioned over several hours after touching down Friday. She said none of those who questioned her would explain what was going on or what would happen to her.

Hickox is a nurse who had been working with Doctors Without Borders in Sierra Leone. Officials said she was taken to a hospital after developing a fever.

She tested negative for Ebola in a preliminary evaluation. Hospital officials would not say whether she would remain in the hospital for the entire 21-day, state-ordered quarantine period or be moved.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Ashoka Mukpo knew he really was in trouble when he saw the people treating him in full suits and hoods.

The American video journalist is home now after recovering from Ebola. In an interview with The Associated Press, he described the fear he felt when medical workers appeared at his bedside in the heavy duty gear needed to prevent the spread of the deadly infection.

Mukpo said he felt as if his body was "at war" with the virus: He was in pain and weak, he had a fever that went as high as 104 degrees, it was hard to walk and eat, and he lost 15 pounds in a week. Mukpo isn't sure how he contracted Ebola because he said he was careful while filming.

School, teachers union president Randy Davis said.

The teacher intercepted the gunman as he paused, possibly trying to reload. student Erick Cervantes told KIRO-TV.

"I'm completely amazed by her actions and I feel for her," Davis told The Associated Press. "I don't know why she was in the cafeteria but I'm just grateful she was there."

The attacker killed one girl Friday and seriously wounded four others — including two of his cousins - before he died of what police said was a self-inflicted wound.

However, it wasn't clear if the shooter committed suicide or if he accidentally shot himself in the struggle with the teacher.

A school resource officer also ran to the scene, Davis said. The shooter was Jaylen

Fryberg, a popular freshman, a government official with direct knowledge of the shooting told The Associated Press. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the media.

Students and parents said Fryberg was a member of a prominent family from the nearby Tulalip Indian actually does ..." tribes and a freshman who played on the high school football team. He was introduced at a football game as a prince in the 2014 Homecoming court.

Fryberg left months of troubling messages on social media, and friends said he'd recently been in a fight over a girl. One of his tweets said, "It breaks me ... It

The tight-knit Native American community on scenic Puget Sound struggled to cope with the tragedy.

Davis said he spoke briefly with Silberberger, who was traumatized. The Marysville School District released a statement from her saving that she is grateful for all the support, but wishes to have privacy at this time.

Ukraine pauses before elections in parliament

MARIUPOL, Ukraine – Ukraine braced for decisive parliamentary elections Saturday against the backdrop of unrest in eastern regions roiled by conflict between government troops and pro-Russian separatist forces.

Campaigning material was being taken down across the country in line with election laws ahead of a vote today that pollsters said will be dominated by President Petro Poroshenko's party.

Parliament is seen changing composition completely with the former ruling party of ex-President Viktor Yanukovych, who was ousted by a street revolt in February, set to disappear from the legislature.

Speaking in a televised address Saturday, Poroshenko said the election would lead to a "full reset of power" and enable the formation of a reformminded legislature.

26 dead in Zambia boat accident

LUSAKA, Zambia — At least 26 people, most of them children, died when a crowded boat capsized in Zambia while on the way to a national celebration, police said Saturday.

Among the drowned in Friday's accident were school children aged from six to 15 years, as well as a baby. The state broadcaster said 23 of those who died were children. One student survived.

They were traveling to another school across Lake Kariba, in the south of the country. They were meant to participate in celebrations marking the 50th anniversary of the southern African nation's independence from Britain.

Military and police divers were sent to the lake to retrieve the bodies.

ROME — A Roman villa's wine cellar, which was converted into an air raid shelter for Benito Mussolini and the Italian dictator's family, opened its anti-gas, double steel doors to tourists Saturday.

Israeli says 'crisis' in U.S. relationship

JERUSALEM — A top Israeli minister said there is a "crisis" in the country's relations with the United States that must be fixed.

Finance Minister Yair Lapid's comments Saturday came a day after U.S. officials said the Obama administration refused Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Yaalon's requests to meet several top national security aides.

The White House and the State Department rejected Israeli proposals for meetings with Vice President Joe Biden, National Security Adviser Susan Rice and Secretary of State John Kerry on his five-day trip to the United States.

Iran hangs woman for fatally stabbing suspected rapist; says attack was planned

Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran hanged a woman Saturday who was convicted of murdering a man she said was trying to rape her, drawing swift international condemnation for a prosecution several countries described as flawed.

Reyhaneh Jabbari was hanged at dawn for premeditated murder, the official IRNA news agency reported. It quoted a statement issued by the Tehran Prosecutor Office on Saturday that rejected the claim of attempted rape and said that all evidence proved that Jabbari had plotted to kill Morteza Abdolali Sarbandi, a former intelligence agent.

The United Nations, as well as Amnesty International, and other human rights groups had called on Iran's judiciary to halt the execution, which was carried out after the country's Supreme Court upheld the verdict. The victim's family could have saved Jabbari's life by accepting blood money but they refused to do so.

According to her 2009 sentencing, Jabbari, 27, stabbed Sarbandi in the back in 2007 after purchasing a knife two days earlier.

"The knife had been used on the back of the deceased, indicating the murder was not self-defense," the agency quoted the court ruling as saying.

Britain, Germany, and a group of European parliamentarians, among others. condemned the execution, as did the United States.

"There were serious concerns with the fairness of the trial," State Department spokeswoman Jen Psaki said in a statement.

Lebanon brawls kill 5 and wound more than 12

BEIRUT — Lebanese troops battled Islamic militants in the northern city of Tripoli for a second day Saturday, with five people killed and more than a dozen wounded in the clashes, the Lebanese army and state media said.

An army statement said troops surrounded the gunmen, exchanging fire and wounding several of them. It said it also had detained some of the fighters and seized weapons and ammunition, although some gunmen were able to flee the area.

The fighting came two days after troops killed three militants and detained a local leader in a raid in the northern Dinniyeh region. One of the three killed was Abdul-Qadir Akkoumi, a Lebanese soldier who announced in a video released this month that he had defected and joined the Islamic State group, the army said.

Canada reopens Parliament Hill area

OTTAWA. Ontario -Canadians returned to the reopened grounds of Parliament Hill on Saturday, just three days after a gunman shot and killed a soldier at the national war memorial and then stormed Parliament before he was gunned down.

House Speaker Andrew Scheer said tours of Parliament will resume Monday, but visitors can expect to see a heightened Royal Canadian Mounted Police presence at building entrances. Counseling sessions will be provided for Commons staff, he said.

On Wednesday, Zehaf-Bibeau, 32, shot to death Cpl. Nathan Cirillo, 24, who was assigned to the honor guard at the national war memorial. Zehaf-Bibeau was eventually gunned down inside Parliament by the sergeant-atarms of the House of Commons, Kevin Vickers.

Zehaf-Bibeau's motive remains unknown, but Prime Minister Stephen Harper has called the shooting a terror attack, and the bloodshed raised fears that Canada is suffering reprisals for joining the U.S.-led air campaign against Islamic State extremists in Iraq and Syria.

Extremists' numbers growing in Germany

BERLIN — The number of Islamic extremists in Germany is growing rapidly, the head of the country's domestic intelligence agency said Saturday.

The agency estimates that some 6,300 people in Germany are adherents of an ultraconservative strain of Islam known as Salafism, Hans-Georg Maassen told public broadcaster rbb-Inforadio. In Germany, all Salafis are considered Islamic extremists and on the radar of the security services, though other groups are also monitored if they are determined to be a threat to the state or democratic order.

Maassen said the number of Salafis could rise to 7,000 by the end of the year, compared to about 3,800 three years ago.

Extremist strands of Islam provide disaffected young people with a sense of belonging and purpose that allows them to hope they'll go "from being underdogs to top dogs," he said.

New attack launched on Syria border town

MURSITPINAR, Turkey - Fighters from the Islamic State group launched a new offensive Saturday, on the northern Syrian town of Kobani, after shelling the area from their positions nearby, activists and a Kurdish official said.

Heavy fighting took place in Kobani and many mortar shells were fired into the town. Machine-gun fire could be clearly heard from inside the town where black smoke was billowing.

The U.S. Central Command said an airstrike destroyed an IS artillery piece near Kobani. In the afternoon, warplanes of the U.S.-led coalition could be heard flying over Kobani.

Idriss Nassan, a senior official in Kobani, said the fighting concentrated on the southern and eastern edges of the town, also known as Ayn Arab.

"They think they can enter the city and these are just dreams," Nassan told The Associated Press by telephone adding that IS fighters have not been able to take Kobani despite more than a month of attacks.

Women on front lines in Syria, Iraq vs. IS SURUC, Turkey — Just over a year ago, Afshin Kobani was a teacher. Now, the Kurdish Syrian woman traded the classroom for the front lines in the battle for Kobani, a town besieged by fighters from the Islamic State extremist group.

The 28-year-old Kurdish fighter, who uses a nom de guerre, said she decided to join the fight in her hometown when she saw IS advances in Syria.

"I lost many friends to this, and I decided there was a need to join up," said Kobani, who declined to reveal her birth name. "This is our land — our own — and if we don't do it, who else will?"

Perched on the other side of the Turkish border, the Syrian town of Kobani has been under an intense assault by IS for more than a month. The town — surrounded on the east, south and west by IS — is being defended by Kurdish forces in Syria.

Egypt: Foreign cash behind Sinai attack

CAIRO — Egypt's President Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi said Saturday that an assault on an army checkpoint in the Sinai Peninsula that killed 31 troops was a "foreign-funded operation" and vowed to take drastic action against militants.

In thundering remarks delivered before cameras ahead of a military funeral for the slain troops, el-Sissi said there are foreign powers that want to "break the back of Egypt," without elaborating. He vowed to take drastic measures to uproot the militants and said Egypt is engaged in an "extensive war" that will last a long time.

Marine dies after noncombat incident

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon said a Marine who died Thursday in a noncombat incident in Baghdad was the second U.S. military death associated with the campaign against the Islamic State group in Iraq and Syria.

The Marine was identified as Lance Cpl. Sean P. Neal, 19, of Riverside, Calif.. The Pentagon isn't providing more details and said it's investigating.

On Oct. 2, the Navy said a Marine who ejected from an MV-22 Osprey aircraft over the Persian Gulf was presumed lost at sea. That was the first death associated with the fight against IS.

A tooth has 5 surfaces; front, back, bottom, and 2 sides. A toothbrush will only clean 3 of the 5 surfaces; front, back and bottom. Floss cleans the remaining 2 sides.

Proper brushing and flossing effectively removes plaque. To do a good job it should take children at least 2 minutes to brush their 20 baby or primary teeth. If it takes 120 seconds to clean 60 surfaces (20 teeth x 3 sides) that's only 2 seconds

Mountaineers not bowled over by a 6-2 record

STILLWATER, Okla.

WVU HEAD COACH Dana Holgorsen didn't give his players much time to enjoy the spoils of their 34-10 victory against Oklahoma State, on Saturday.

Forget that it was the Mountaineers' (6-2, 4-1 Big 12) fourth consecutive conference win, something WVU has never accomplished in the Big 12, and last accomplished in the Big East in 2010. And really forget that the victory made the Mountaineers bowl-eligible after they missed out on the postseason this past fall.

The win against OSU was just that, a win, Holgorsen said. Nothing more, nothing less.

"We're 6-2 and we won, so we're going to celebrate this win," he said. "But we're not going to be satisfied with the fact that we've won six. I told [the players] that I don't want to hear anything about [a bowl]. Everything that we're doing is week-toweek, so enjoy this and then get ready tomorrow for another top 10 team coming to Morgantown.'

Holgorsen's message clearly hit its mark in the Mountaineers' locker room.

"It means the same thing as every other win," sophomore cornerback Daryl Worley said.

"On to the next one," quarterback Clint Trickett agreed.

Punter Nick O'Toole was one of the few players to even say the word "bowl" during WVU's postgame interviews, and even that was only to reaffirm Holgorsen's statement.

"This would be the first bowl game I've ever gone to, which would be great, but coach Holgorsen said that he doesn't want to hear anything about us being bowl eligible and that he doesn't want to hear anything about rankings," O'Toole said. "We have a top 10 team (TCU) coming to Morgantown next week and we have to focus on that."

Seeing TCU looming on the schedule certainly had a sobering effect on WVU's post-victory euphoria. The No. 10 Horned Frogs crushed Texas Tech, 82-27, on Saturday. TCU averaged 60 points in its past three wins.

The Horned Frogs are a formidable opponent, but don't count on the Mountaineers backing down from a challenge.

This past week, Holgorsen made a point of saying that his players weren't going to be satisfied with the team's 5-2 start to the season. That mentality was one of the reasons I had so much confidence in WVU's ability to win in a hostile environment in Stillwater.

And it's one of the biggest reasons not to count the Mountaineers out as they prepare to face their fourth Top 25 opponent of the season.

WVU isn't just happy to be here. The Mountaineers aren't simply content with beating their 2013 win total. The team has bigger goals than simply making a bowl. WVU is out to prove that it is better than good. The Mountaineers want to be elite.

"We're not finished," wide receiver Mario Alford said. "We want to win-out from here. We're excited, but we have a couple more in front of us. We want to win the Big 12: That's our goal right now."

Congratulations on the win. Now get back to work.

STILLWATER, Okla. - Earlier this season, WVU defensive coordinator Tony Gibson said his team had the potential to field one of the best thirddown defenses in the nation.

Saturday's performance After against Oklahoma State, it would be hard to argue with him.

WVU dominated the Cowboys on third down, holding OSU to 2 of 15 (.133) on conversion attempts during the Mountaineers' 34-10 victory, at Boone Pickens Stadium. Oklahoma State didn't convert a third down until the fourth quarter.

"Obviously our defense played well," WVU head coach Dana Holgorsen said. "Third downs, once again, was off-the-charts good."

The Mountaineers forced three three-and-outs and one four-and-out, and Oklahoma State turned the ball over on downs four times. WVU held the Cowboys scoreless in the second half, as OSU's average possession last-

STILLWATER, Okla. — Wendell Smallwood had a pretty good idea how Oklahoma State would try to corral the WVU offense in Saturday's Big 12 Conference game.

"We figured they were going to try and stop the passing," the Mountaineers' sophomore running back said.

With a star receiver like WVU's Kevin White on the field, who could blame them?

Certainly not Smallwood and his fellow backs.

"It opened it up for all the running backs," Smallwood said. "We knew we could run the ball into a five-man box. We just took advantage of it."

Smallwood racked up a career-high 132 yards, and the No. 22 Mountaineers registered 210 on the ground in their 34-10 victory, before a Boone Pickens Stadium crowd of 59,124. Dreamius Smith collected 72 yards and a touchdown, as WVU (6-2, 4-1 Big 12) earned its fourth straight win and clinched a bowl berth with four games remaining. WVU played without running back starter Rushel Shell, who suffered a foot injury in the first quarter of the Oct. 18 Baylor game.

"Oh, man, I'm just proud of those guys to stay in it and understand the situation and be the next man up," WVU running backs coach Ja'Juan Seider said. "I couldn't be more proud of Wendell and the way he fought."

Smallwood sustained an ankle injury in the Baylor game and missed nearly half the game. He did not practice Thursday of this week but answered the call Saturday.

"He ran the way Rushel ran," Seider said. "He set the tone for those guys.'

Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas — Trevone Boykin threw a school-record seven touchdown passes and No. 10 TCU showcased a new fastpaced offense by scoring the most points in its history in an 82-27 rout of Texas Tech, on Saturday.

The Horned Frogs (6-1, 3-1 Big 12) beat their previous scoring high of 69 in the spread attack directed in part by co-offensive coordinator Sonny Cumbie, a former Texas Tech quarterback who spent the past four seasons as an assistant with the Red Raiders.

Boykin had two scoring tosses each to Josh Doctson and Deante Grav. who had a 92-yarder about two minutes before Ty Slanina caught a 57-yard touchdown that gave TCU 61 points midway through the third quarter.

Texas Tech (3-5, 1-4) rolled up 287 of a combined 512 total yards in the first quarter before fading.

(11) Kansas State 23 Texas 0

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Kansas State's (6-1, 4-0 Big 12) rapidly improving defense pitched the first shutout of Texas (3-5, 2-3) in more than a decade.

Kentucky got within a TD four times, and Heisman Trophy hopeful Prescott and Robinson answered with TDs on three occasions. Prescott ran for TDs of 2 and 11 yards and hit Brandon Hill for an 8-vard TD.

(8) Michigan State 35 Michigan 11

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Jeremy Langford ran for 177 yards and three touchdowns, and Michigan State (7-1, 4-0 Big Ten) trounced rival Michigan (3-5, 1-3) again.

Fall a good time to take kids angling for panfish

ONCE LABOR DAY arrives, too many people forget about fishing, especially fishing for panfish.

These are bluegills, crappie, sunfish, etc. Some people may blame the Division of Natural Resources (DNR) for this, since we open squirrel season much earlier than before, but what a great way to spend a Saturday with your kids. Get up early and hunt squirrels and then fish. When late afternoon comes, hit the woods again for more squirrels if vou haven't killed vour limit in the morning.

Going after bluegills is a great way to teach a kid to fly fish. Use a 7- to 9-foot rod that's made to cast 4- to 6-weight line. A weight-forward or double taper line works the best with a 3- to 6-pound test tippet on 7- to 9-foot taper leaders.

A pond is a great place to start a kid out casting a fly line. Accuracy is not as important as it is on the moving water of a stream. Even if they don't make a good cast, they may still catch a fish. It's a great way to teach them to "set the hook."

In the spring and summer, we see lots of bluegills and crappies around docks and in shallow water next to the bank near weeds. However, in the early fall, they move to deeper water. This is especially true of the bigger ones. Then, as the temperature cools, they move into the shallower water. Since they feed by sight, fishing in the middle of the day can be very productive at this time of year. Hence, hunt squirrels, fish and hunt again. When winter comes, they are back in the deep water until spring and the spawn begins.

What type of bait should you use? Crappies like larger baits because they have much bigger mouths than bluegills. When using artificial bait for bluegills, choose something that is white, pink or chartreuse. Spinner baits and small, soft plastic jigs work well.

Live bait is also an excellent choice. Worms and nightcrawlers work great, but remember to use only enough of the worm to cover the hook because the bluegill has a small mouth. Grasshoppers and crickets are also great baits. But if you want to use them now, you'd better hurry because the freezing temperatures are just about here, and that means no hoppers.

No matter what type of live bait you're using, a thin wire hook with a long shank works best. When using a grasshopper, thread it on the hook from head to tail with the hook sticking out of the tail. This way, it's almost impossible for the fish to eat any part of the bait without grabbing the hook. Using this method does kill the hopper. If you don't want to kill it, just run the hook through the lower section of the abdomen. The longer shank hook is also easier to remove from the fish's mouth.

What a great way to spend a Saturday with your kids. Get up early and hunt squirrels and then fish. When late afternoon comes, hit the woods again ...

Bluegills and crappies are great eating and, of course, the bigger, the better and the easier they are to clean.

Where do you find the big ones? In a body of water that has fewer numbers of panfish. People often ask me why this is true. It's simple. The fewer the number of fish, the more each of them has to eat. A body of water will only support so many pounds of fish. The larger the number of fish, the smaller they will be. The same thing is true of deer. When their numbers get too high, the smaller they are because of the limited amount of food on a given area of land.

I have trouble convincing people who fish in my ponds to keep or throw out fish they catch. However, I have a few giant catfish and some very large bass that help keep the bluegill and crappie populations down. I've been known to fill a couple of 5-gallon buckets with bluegills and take them to the woods to feed the "critters."

Kansas State 3, WVU 2

Nikki Attea's careerhigh 25 kills led a total of four players in double figures, but it wasn't enough to push WVU past No. 22ranked Kansas State. The Wildcats won by set scores of 29-27, 23-25, 21-25, 25-23 and 12-15.

"I'm really proud of the performance we had today," WVU (13-9, 3-5 Big 12) coach Jill Kramer said. "When we were practicing before this, we talked about how this was going to be a team effort. # Bumgarner faces Shields again in Game 5 today

WORLD SERIES

KANSAS CITY and San Francisco played Game 4 late Saturday. The game ended past deadline.

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — When it came down to it, the San Francisco Giants decided that having a fully rested Madison Bumgarner starting one game was preferable than trying to send him out twice on short rest.

So Bumgarner will take his sterling postseason resume into Game 5 of the World Series tonight on his usual four days' rest, when the Giants take on James Shields and the Kansas City Royals, in the final game of the season in San Francisco.

That decision allowed Ryan Vogelsong to start Game 4 on Saturday, with Jake Peavy and Tim Hudson set to start the final two games if the Series goes seven. Bumgarner would be available in relief in Game 7 if necessary.

"I don't think at this point we should push Madison either," manager Bruce Bochy said. "Then you're going to ask him to go on another three days. So we're keeping things in order because of how well all of our starters have thrown."

A report surfaced during Game 3 on Friday that mates he demanded to pitch on short rest for Game 4 for the first time of his career.

Bumgarner forcefully denied the report Saturday and said he just prepared to be ready whenever Bochy needed him.

"It sounds like I'm trying to run the team, which I'm certainly not," he said. "That's no good that that got out there somehow. It doesn't make any sense to me why that would happen.

Bumgarner told his team- I never said anything to anyone about anything. We knew that was an option, and I'm prepared where I would be ready for Game 4 or 5 or any of them. That's just ridiculous."

> The Giants trailed the Series, 2-1, heading into Saturday night's game.

Bumgarner is the ace on the Giants' staff with Matt Cain sidelined by injury and two-time Cy Young winner Tim Lincecum relegated to the bullpen.

He backed that up by going 18-10 with a 2.98 ERA during the season, but it has been in October when Bumgarner is usually at his best. He allowed one run in seven innings to get the win in Game 1 against Kansas City and is 6-3 with a 2.54 ERA in 11 career postseason appearances

He pitched a four-hit shutout to beat Pittsburgh in the wild-card playoff and went 7 2/3 scoreless innings to win Game 1 of the NLCS.

Dawson leads Champions AT&T tourney by a stroke

GOLF

SAN ANTONIO — Marco Dawson birdied four of the first six holes Saturday and shot a 5-under 67 to take a one-stroke lead in the Champions Tour's AT&T Championship.

Bernhard Langer moved closer to wrapping up the Charles Schwab Cup before the season-ending event, next week.

Dawson also birdied two of the last four holes to reach 12-under 132 on TPC Antonio's AT&T San Canyons Course. He won his only title in a PGA Toursanctioned event in 2002 in the Web.com Tour's LaSalle Bank Open.

"I'm not going to lose any sleep, believe me," Dawson said. "I used to be a perfectionist, but my attitude now is to play like I'm in the pro-am. Have fun. It's not life or death out there."

Woody Austin (65) was second, and Wes Short Jr. (67) was 10 under.

Langer, a five-time winner this season, was tied for eighth, at 7 under after a 66. He has a 771-point lead on second-place Colin Montgomerie in the Schwab Cup and can take the title with a three-way tie for seventh or better.

"It would be nice to settle things while I'm here,' Langer said.

McGladrey Classic

ST. SIMONS ISLAND. Ga. — Will MacKenzie made a hole-in-one that hardly anyone saw and finished with a 45-foot birdie putt that gave him a 5-under 65 and a share of the lead with Andrew Svoboda, at 198, going into the final round.

MacKenzie holed out with an 8-iron from 178 yards on the par-3 sixth hole. He said it was his third ace on the PGA Tour, and one he'll never forget, mainly because of the reaction. There wasn't one. MacKenzie didn't even know it was in the hole until he looked around the green and couldn't find his ball. A spectator indicated with his hand that it was in the hole.

Blue Bay LPGA

HAINAN ISLAND, China — American Jessica Korda rebounded from an opening double bogey for a share of the secondround lead. Korda shot a 5-under 67 to match South Africa's Lee-Anne Pace at 11-under 133 at Jian Lake Blue Bay.

BY TODD MURRAY

The Dominion Post

STILLWATER, Okla. — Believe it or not, the sense of calm that typically surrounds the No. 22-ranked WVU football team sometimes unnerves the coaches.

"Some of our coaches are like, 'Why are you guys so calm?' " nose tackle Kyle Rose said. "I think we have a business-like approach to

"We've been through every experience, every adversity. I don't think there's anything that fazes us."

The Mountaineers broke open a seven-point game with 17 fourth-quarter points en route to a 34-10 Big 12 Conference victory, against Oklahoma State, on Saturday afternoon.

"I'm obviously excited for our coaches and players to come to Stillwater and get a victory," WVU coach Dana Holgorsen said after his team's fourth straight Big 12 win.

"There wasn't anything easy about it. It was a lot more challenging than what the final score indicated. I think everybody agrees with that."

Four plays that Defined the game

Running the football

Oklahoma State was determined to do everything it could to make sure Kevin White and the Mountaineers' receivers did not beat them. They limited White to three catches, 27 yards and one touchdown.

Where the Cowboys didn't fare so ell was in their run defense, particularly in the second half.

Behind 132 yards from Wendell Smallwood, the Mountaineers piled up 210 yards on the ground. Dreamius Smith gained 72 yards.

"We have great backs," White said. "Whenever they touch the ball, they always try to make the most of it. They've been doing a great job so far."

Third-down defense stifles Cowboys

WVU's defense figured to have more than it could handle in trying to repeat the third-down feat it pulled

The then-No. 4 Bears went an anemic 3-for-16 on third downs in their 41-27 loss, at Milan Puskar Stadium.

WVU's defense met the challenge once again on third down, as Oklahoma State converted just two of its 15 opportunities.

"It looked like we were playing defense," Holgorsen said with a smile. "It looked like we mixed it up. Sometimes we'd blitz on third down and sometimes we'd drop everything. It keeps them off balance."

Coming up with turnovers

The Mountaineers' inability to force turnovers has been a season-long sore subject with the coaching staff.

WVU came up with two in Saturday's victory, courtesy of true freshman safety Dravon Henry.

Henry intercepted two Daxx Garman passes. He returned the second pick 52 yards for a fourth-quarter touchdown that sealed the win, with 4:44 remaining.

"The whole defense is playing good," Holgorsen said. "To get two turnovers in a game and one of them actually score? That was like, 'Wow!' I didn't think I was ever going to see it again, to be quite honest with you."

He registered 123 all-purpose yards Saturday, but the Mountaineers kept him out of the end zone. Five of Mike Molinari's seven kickoffs were touchbacks. Nick O'Toole placed five of his seven punts inside the 20. Hill had just 5 punt-return yards.

"Both Nick O'Toole on the punt team and Mike Molinari on the kickoff team probably deserve a few game balls for keeping the ball away from No. 24 (Hill)," Holgorsen said. "He's pretty dynamic."

Inside the numbers

4 — That's the Mountaineers' winning streak. The last time they did that was in 2012.

6 — The number of WVU victories this season, which qualifies it for a bowl game. The Mountaineers won only four games a year ago in missing out on bowl season for the first time since 2001.

8 — Quarterback Clint Trickett has thrown a touchdown pass in all eight of the Mountaineers' games this season and in nine straight games dating to the 2013 campaign.

WVU prepped for a hot time in Stillwater

SIDELINES

BY TODD MURRAY AND ED OWENS

The Dominion Post

STILLWATER, Okla. — WVU Trickett quarterback Clint couldn't believe it.

Neither could many of his teammates.

The Mountaineers' coaches warned the players all week how hot it was going to be in Stillwater on Saturday.

To prepare, WVU practiced at the Caperton Indoor Facility on Tuesday and Wednesday, with the heat cranked up.

"We were like, 'Dude, it isn't going to be that hot out there," Trickett said with a laugh.

Turns out they were wrong. The temperature was 89 degrees at kickoff, and the players said it felt like 110 degrees on the field. "It was 15 degrees hotter than the indoor (facility)," Trickett said. After Saturday's 34-10 victory.

the players were counting their blessings for having practiced indoors with the heat. "It helped us a lot," said sophomore running back Wendell Smallwood, who ran for a careerand game-high 132 yards.

WVU running backs coach Ja'Juan Seider said it made all the difference for his charges.

"You talk about the little things," he said. "I think doing the little things throughout the week helped us. You can never simulate [the heat]. We had it hot in there. I don't care what you say. That felt like August and South Florida heat. It was hot. Our kids felt it.

"That's one thing about this team: Being resilient and overcoming obstacles because it was hot. It was hot for them too. We had to finish.'

Happy birthday, Dravon

Freshman safety Dravon Henry turned 19 years old Friday. He celebrated Saturday.

Henry picked off OSU quarterback Daxx Garman in the first quarter and grabbed his second of the interception of the day in the fourth, tying cornerback Daryl Worley for the top spot among the Mountaineers' defenders.

"It's what we've all been waiting for, for [Henry] to make the big play," Worley said. "We all knew that he had it in him. Today it was just pulled out of him. He was the best defensive back on the field, hands down. Big-time players make big plays. And that's what he did."

Henry, who wasn't made available due to head coach Dana Hol-gorsen's team rules preventing freshmen from speaking with the media, also scored his first career touchdown against the Cowboys. He returned his fourth-quarter interception 52 yards for a score, becoming the first WVU player since Darwin Cook (2013) to record a pick-six. Henry also became the first Mountaineer to log two interceptions in a game since Brodrick Jenkins, against Rutgers, in 2011.

"He's a kid who works so hard," WVU defensive coordinator Tony Gibson said of Henry. "He wants to be great. He studies film and works at practice. [Safeties coach Joe] DeForest told me Thursday after practice that Dravon was going to have a big game, that he's really worked hard this week.

"Baylor a week ago was his best day, until today. That was a good birthday present for him."

Shaq attack

Defensive end Shaq Riddick's fourth-quarter sack of Garman marked Riddick's fourth sack in WVU's past two games. Riddick, who recorded three against Baylor, has six sacks on the season, tying Will Clarke's team-leading total from 2013. Riddick is also tied for No. 24 on WVU's season sack list.

TCU may be missing two

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported that TCU's leading receiver Josh Doctson left Saturday's 82-27 rout of Texas Tech on crutches because of a foot injury, and safety Chris Hackett was ejected for fighting — likely leaving the Horned Frogs without both players for at least the start of this week's game at WVU.

Doctson, who caught two touchdown passes in the first half, appeared to have his right foot or ankle turned under a tackle on a catch for a first-and-goal in the third quarter. He went to the locker room on crutches.

Hackett was called for punching on the Tech sideline following Sam Carter's interception for TCU, late in the third quarter. The ejection means the junior weak safety will have to sit out the first half of the WVU game.

SADDLE

Smallwood was adamant about not being stopped. To be at his best, he did his best to stay hydrated before the game in oppressive 89-degree heat.

He may have overdone it, though.

"I drank too much before the game, so my stomach was crazy full," Smallwood said. "I knew it was going to come up in a matter of time. I just kept drinking, and it kept coming back up."

When Smallwood hit the field, he hit the holes and kept bouncing around for even more yardage. The Mountaineers weren't shy about calling his number.

"I think the more I get the ball, the better I get," he said. "I was getting kind of tired, but I kept going. The more carries, the more yards. I liked it."

The Cowboys and their double-coverage White to a season-low three catches for 27 yards and a touchdown. They paid a price for not having more defenders in the box.

WVU's pack of four running backs delivered the punishment for that strategy.

"Giving those guys the ball when they are dropping nine people is something that makes sense to me, so we're going to continue to do it," WVU coach Dana Holgorsen said. "If they crowd the box, we'll probably throw it."

The Mountaineers were particularly effective running the ball in third-down situations.

WVU converted 50 percent (9 of 18) of its thirddown plays.

Holgorsen wasn't afraid to run the ball on third-andlong plays.

WVU running back Dreamius Smith (2) steps around a tackle en route to a score Saturday.

"We saw something there we could take advantage of," he said. "I know the chatter. I know what people say. It's something I felt was the best thing to do.

"Believe it or not, we try to call plays on third down that work. We saw a few things we would be able to get. Dreamius made a couple of great runs on third down. Those are some of our better players."

The third-down success not only kept drives alive but also allowed the defense to rest on the sideline. That was critical in Saturday's heat.

"There was a point where we kind of had to help the defense out," said quarterback Clint Trickett, who completed 21 of 30 passes for 238 yards and two touchdowns.

"Either we were scoring too fast or it was three-andout. Those (third-down runs) definitely helped."

Trickett said the Mountaineers had to come together after their 85-vard rushing effort in the first half and demand more of themselves.

"We ran the ball better in the second half," he said. "We were running it the first half, and in the second quarter when we got up, we just weren't running it very well.

"We'd get three yards and be in third-and-long and we'd have to convert. Sometimes we did. Sometimes we didn't. The second half we really got in there, everyone was focused and there was a lot of energy.

"Everybody was going to be tired. We were like, 'Let's be tired after a win.' We got some energy and were able to come out rejuvenated in the second half and were able to run the ball."

Smith put a fitting exclamation point on the game, when he broke loose for a 40-yard run and WVU's final touchdown, with 3:12 to play.

Smith, who hails from Wichita, was playing in front of 52 family and friends, who cheered wildly near the WVU sideline as Smith cross the goal line.

"It was great to have Dreamius come back,' Trickett said. "With Rushel out, we needed other guys to step up. We've always had a committee of backs. That's just what happens."

DEFENSE

ed just six plays.

"That really saved us the game," Gibson said. "They were 3-of-20 on third and fourth downs. I'm happy with the way we played."

The Mountaineers consistently put Oklahoma State in third-and-long situations, with the Cowboys needing an average of 8.3 yards in order to convert.

"The good thing about our third-down package is that we're doing a good job on first and second down," defensive lineman Kyle Rose said. "We're getting them into long third-down situations, which forces them to make high-impact decisions. We have a good 'nickel' package and we get to the quarterback a lot. If we're rushing three and dropping eight, the guys do a good job in coverage. And we're trying to get home with three."

Both of Oklahoma State's turnovers came in similar situations. WVU freshman safety Dravon Henry snared his first career interception when OSU quarterback Daxx Garman took a shot on second-and-15 in the first quarter. Henry struck again in the fourth quarter, intercepting Garman on thirdand-10 and returning it 48 yards for a touchdown.

Henry's pick-six blew the game open, giving the Mountaineers a 27-10 lead with less than five minutes to play.

"We emphasize getting off the field, working hard on third downs and making a stop," sophomore cornerback Daryl Worley said. "When we get off the field, it means our offense is coming on the field and we know they're going to put points on the board. So on third down we just emphasize doing your job. As long as we do that, we're going to be good." The Mountaineers have been better than good. The team entered Saturday's contest ranked No. 25 nationally in third-down defense, holding opponents to a percentage of .327. They dropped that to .304 following the win against OSU. That could be good enough to push WVU inside the top 15 in third-down defense.

"It was a combination of things," cornerbacks coach Brian Mitchell said, when asked about WVU's thirddown success. "Gibson kept [OSU] off balance and our kids were really straining on third down. They were 3for-20 if you include fourth down, too. It goes back to the collective. It's not just the secondary: It's the front, it's the linebackers, it's everyone doing their part."

County has to respond

Alarm on funding VFDs requires urgent solution

Whenever you hear sirens screaming to a fire, it's often no more than a distraction.

Unless it's your property or life on the line.

Or you're the volunteer firefighter risking your life to save someone else's or their property.

In early May, the Monongalia County Volunteer Fire Companies' Association (VFCA) presented a new funding proposal to the County Commission.

Almost six months later, that proposal, which would have imposed a fee of 38 cents on every $1,000 of a county resident's tax bill, appears to have crashed and burned. Most of that time was spent waiting for the prosecuting attorney's office to issue an opinion on the proposal.

Now, it appears that opinion has set off another alarming proposal any fire fee will require creation of a county fire board.

The fire board would have control of all revenues and the authority to create fire districts, and most of its members would not be members of volunteer fire departments (VFDs).

"This letter (the opinion) has added as many questions as answers, but at least we've got direction," is how one commissioner described it.

Though we're inclined to agree with the first part of that statement, we question the direction part.

We're not in the business of assuming things, but we doubt Monongalia County's 12 VFDs will agree to give up local control to gain additional funding.

If memory serves, this concept of a countywide fire board was tried once before and was met with a lukewarm response then, too.

Like many questions at every level of government, this issue is complicated. For now, VFDs get $20,000 annually from our county and another $40,000-$50,000 from a state tax on insurance policies to subsidize VFDs.

Imposing a fire fee on all county residents, including Morgantown residents who already pay a fire fee, will be a tough sell. A county fire board also appears dead on arrival.

Yet, this issue cannot afford to be put on warm for another six months without any real movement toward a

It's not a political issue, though some might want to think so. It's not a seasonal issue, either, such as maintaining our roads.

What it is, is a life-and-death issue no one wants to think about until something terrible happens.

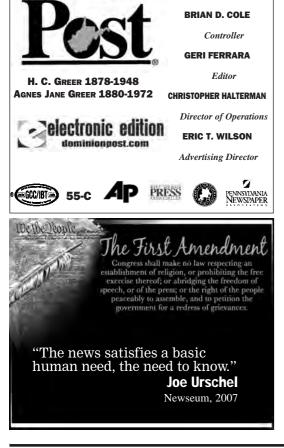

The County Commission must find a way to at least double its appropriation to county VFDs and not simply indulge in wishful thinking to find another $240,000 for them.

If we close our eyes and ears to those sirens, it'll just lure us to an even greater disaster.

Enforce alcohol laws on game days, too

I am a longtime resident of Morgantown and a native of West Virginia. My father graduated from WVU in 1950, and my spouse and our three children are WVU graduates as well.

I attended the final game at old Mountaineer Field and never missed a home game if I could help it. I take pride in my heritage and our university and I continue to be an avid fan of WVU football.

What intrigues me is how WVU and Morgantown officials respond to the riotous activities that occur following wins like the Baylor game.

Six or seven Saturdays a year, the laws concerning alcohol consumption are suspended in Morgantown because tailgating and football are synonymous and alcohol sales are a huge profit maker.

WVU and Morgantown law enforcement turn a blind MORE LETTERS to the editor on post-game riots. Page 2-D.

eye to illegal activities that occur all around them on game day. And then everyone whines when students get out of hand after a huge win.

Maybe it's time for the pot to stop calling the kettle black. Rules are rules. Enforce them on game day just like every other day.

If we want students to stop acting like drunken idiots, then maybe "mature" adults should set a better example for them.

As a parent, I used to cringe when I recognized my bad behavior exhibited by my children. If we are looking for someone to blame, maybe we need to look in a mirror.

WVU should've nipped it in bud years ago

I am all for celebrating after a WVU win, but committing criminal acts such as setting fires and throwing rocks and bottles at the police is not called for.

I agree with President E. Gordon Gee's statement that this is "unacceptable Mountaineer behavior."

When one enters higher education, one should know right from wrong. If a person is caught committing a criminal act, the university should expel the guilty ones. This will send a very strong message throughout the student body.

In a small way, the university is partly to blame for this sort of behavior, and here's why: Years ago, when these riots first happened, WVU should have acted then, instead of just talking about it. As "Barney Fife" used to

Ghosts not listed

Fear survey: Majority believe crime rates up despite reality

JUST IN TIME FOR HALLOWEEN a new poll asks what Americans fear most. It isn't zombies or ghosts. These lists of fears and concerns are more than entertainment. They are a window into how we view the dangers in our lives.

Researchers at Chapman University, in southern California, conducted a lengthy survey of adults from across the country. They then organized the responses into four areas of fear or concern: Personal fears, crime, natural disasters and what they called fear factors in which researchers tried to figure out who has what fears and why.

In general, Americans think crime rates are climbing, when in fact they've been declining for about 20 years. (The decline has been dramatic, but some crimes have increased in the past couple of years, though not to 1990s levels. The recent upticks aren't a trend yet, but might affect perceptions of safety.) And most Americans, while concerned about natural disasters, aren't prepared for the very real dangers posed by them.

Law-enforcement data show the country getting safer over the past two decades as rates for violent crime declined, or for some crimes remained flat, but a majority of surveyed Americans are sure the rates have gone up. Among the crimes Americans think are on the rise are school shootings, human trafficking, gang violence, pe-dophilia, sexual assault and child abduction.

This matters because broadly shared misconceptions about crime rates affect both personal behavior and public policy. Someone worried about stranger violence might choose to stay home rather than venture downtown in the evening, or voters might demand harsher laws if they feel unsafe.

- Americans' top five fears are: ■ Walking alone at night
- Becoming the victim of identity theft
- Various risks of using

- mass/random shooting ■ Public speaking

Except for public speaking, the list reflects the kinds of stories that have high profiles in the news, and they get airtime and big headlines because they are out of the ordinary. Cancer, heart disease and stroke are far more dangerous, but weren't at the top of the list.

It's important to stay safe on the Internet and to avoid walking in truly dangerous places, but should they be at the top of people's concerns? No. Eat right, exercise and drive responsibly, and you'll have a good chance of living longer. But that's kind of boring. People respond to more dramatic dangers. Sugar just doesn't look that scary. Here's another list

Thank you Mr. Bradlee for all of it

DID THE FIRST AMENDMENT ever have a more stylish defender — and one who made more effective use of it — than Ben Bradlee?

The legendary managing editor of The Washington Post who died Tuesday at 93, Bradlee's 23 years at the helm were marked by landmark collisions between a free press and government, from the Pentagon Papers to reporting on Watergate. He also weathered criticism that he was too close to one-time Georgetown neighbor John F. Kennedy to be an objective journalist, and too removed from a story by a young reporter, Janet Cooke, that resulted in a returned Pulitzer Prize.

With style and wit, and without apology, Bradlee championed a free press as a watchdog on government.

"Obviously the First Amendment is the cornerstone of our business and of democracy," he said in a 2006 interview at the Newseum. "It isn't something that I commit to memory and say like my prayers, but it has a place in my day-to-day life. It is the freedom that allows us to do good work. It allows us to be important in society."

Americans generally take their First Amendment rights for granted, Bradlee continued. I know they do ... and that's great. That means we're doing something right."

Even so, Bradlee said, there was strength in his belief that "freedom of the press is ingrained in American society. A president comes and tries to do something, and in the process, tramples on the First Amendment. He gets brought up short and doesn't make a fuss about it. They all cave. And that's good. The Pentagon Papers was a once-in-a-lifetime fight over the First Amendment. But it was worth the fight. You got to draw the line, and you can't let them cross it."

Bradlee's courage in holding government accountable is the stuff of myth — and fact. After reviewing a particularly significant bit of reporting by Post reporters Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein that implicated Attorney General John Mitchell and President Richard M. Nixon in Watergate wrongdoing, Bradlee recounted the high stakes involved, and then reportedly said, "You had better be right." As it turned out, they were.

His gruff manner, aristocratic bearing and journalistic independence grated on some, to be sure. But his career embodied what the founders must have had in mind in building into the basic laws of this nation such a strong protection for a free press: An unflagging, unabashed passion for finding the truth, and an enthusiasm and commitment to telling it to one's fellow citizens. And for all of that, thank you,

Mr. Bradlee.

Hysteria about Ebola needs to stop real quick

BY CLARENCE LUSANE

McClatchy-Tribune News Service (MCT)

When the Obama haters met the Ebola hysterics, they fell in love.

Faster than you could say President Obola — the latest slur against the president — rightwing bloggers, talk-show hosts and politicians pushed the racial panic buttons.

In Dallas, young children of African immigrants have been called "Ebola kids." And across the country, recent African immigrants, many of them American citizens, report fear on the part of their co-workers, neighbors and even friends that they are somehow secretly infected.

Fox News has been the most egregious peddler of racialized nonsense. "The Five" co-host Andrea Tantaros opined that Africans will come to the United States and then "seek treatment from a witch doctor." Fox News medical "expert" psychiatrist Keith Ablow argued that Obama supports the spread of Ebola because his sympathies and "his affiliations" are with Africa.

Given the general lack of knowledge and stereotypes regarding Africa, nearly 40 percent of the American public believes that the United States faces a potential Ebola epidemic.

Their call to stop all flights from and to West African countries severely affected by Ebola — or all flights from and to anywhere in Africa — is a very short hop away from the demand to stop all Africans from entering the country.

The obvious fact that anyone can get around the flight ban by traveling to a third or fourth country, or that white Americans or non-Africans might carry the infection seems beside the point.

What's more, some African countries have demonstrated amazing efficiency in combating the Ebola outbreak. Senegal and Nigeria have been declared Ebola-free by the World Health Organization.

One of Obama's first actions should be to debunk the myths, rumors and racial hysteria that are contagious right now.

CLARENCE LUSANE is a professor of political science and international relations at American Universitv

■ Becoming ill

These are all things we often can do something about if we make good judgments about the risks they pose. You probably won't be exposed to Ebola, but you have a good chance of contracting flu. You probably should get a flu shot and stay out of hospitals, if you have a choice, for reasons other than Ebola. The flu kills more than 30,000 Americans a year, and infections acquired in hospitals cause far more deaths than the flu.

Natural disasters are frightening. In the Pacific Northwest, we face potentially devastating volcanic eruptions and earthquakes, though they happen infrequently enough that most people probably don't think about them very often.

Americans listed these as the top five feared natural disasters (and their consequences):

- Tornado/hurricane
- Earthquakes ■ Floods
- Pandemic or major epidemic ■ Power outage

A power outage is not exactly a natural disaster, but outages are often caused by natural phenomena, like our fall wind-

I'd better check my flashlights. The survey found that despite fears, only 25 percent of Americans have emergency kits ready.

storms. It's almost November, so

The researchers found that most Americans knew they should be prepared, but just didn't act on the information they had about preparedness.

The survey looked at the factors that affect which people are more likely to have various fears. A couple of things stood out as predictors of fear — having a lower level of education and watching lots of television.

Fear is necessary for survival, but it poses its own dangers when it doesn't match reality. The value of this survey is that it offers a starting point for some mental and emotional rebalancing to match fears with realistic levels of danger so that we can do what we need to do to really be safer.

Cast a ballot if you're an informed voter

Vote if you know the candidates and the issues.

If you are a recent arrival to the Morgantown area and are not familiar with the candidates or the issues, please, "Do not vote." You may cancel the vote of an intelligent, well-informed voter.

Several years ago when I was working with the legislators in Charleston, a leader of the West Virginia Senate said, "Burkey, I want to ask you a serious question." I replied, "Sure, Senator, that is why I am here."

He said, "Why does the West Virginia University and Monongalia County community send delegates to the state Legislature that can't find their way to the bathroom?"

I replied with an embarrassed chuckle, "Senator, I guess it is so you will have someone to blame."

The senator made a valid point that we should strive to correct.

At the ripe old age of 87, I have discovered that there are resources we should utilize when we need help and guidance in this political world.

Our daily newspaper, The Dominion Post, has an editorial board that interviews candidates from all parties and makes an informed judgment and endorsement of the best candidates to cast your vote for. So there is no valid excuse not to vote.

An informed voter will keep this great USA leading the world. We can't afford another mistake of $16 trillion, or leading from behind.

Voters should re-elect 'Google of Legislature'

We have a hard-working lady representing us in Charleston. Cindy Frich is our delegate who did not run away from Charleston when there was a chemical spill disaster at the beginning of the 2014 legislative session.

Even though Frich became ill from drinking the polluted water, she stayed in Charleston during the disaster to listen to other people who were affected and frightened.

Frich was our only delegate who reported to duty every day and voted every day, making her the only delegate in the 51st House District with a 100 percent roll call voting record this year.

Frich reads all the bills on her committee agendas so she can either try to improve them or prevent them from becoming law.

She serves on the House Judiciary Committee and the new Energy Committee. One of the other committees she serves on is the exclusive Legislative Rule-Making Review Committee. Only two House Republicans serve on this committee that oversees rules and regulations Legislators statewide have come to trust Frich because they know she reads the legislation and gives her honest assessment of it without grandstanding. Some legislators call her the "Google of the Legislature."

Frich earned the "Friend of the West Virginia Taxpayer Award," "Legislative Excellence Award" for jobs, and supports family values. You can count on Frich, and we need to keep this valuable resource in the Legislature.

We need Manypenny in Charleston again

If it ain't broke, don't fix it. Delegate Mike Manypenny, D-Taylor, has proven his dedication to serve constituents repeatedly, on several important issues. I'm not in his political party. I don't care. But we need to re-elect him. Here are three reasons he gets my vote.

■ Water protection: Manypenny is House Chair on the joint legislative oversight commission on State Water Resources. When fracking came to my neighborhood, Manypenny was available to our group on a regular basis.

He was well informed on the issue, spending time to research fracking's impact elsewhere to learn from their experience. During last year's legislative session, Charleston had an environmental crisis when a chemical spill polluted drinking water (for 300,000 people). This event struck home at a most opportune time, unearthing a huge lack of oversight on above-ground storage tanks. For many reasons, protecting our drinking water remains a concern from now on.

- Helping my community: Manypenny has been instrumental, even proactive, on more than one occasion in helping the Bunner Ridge Community Association obtain state funds to rebuild our community center that burned down a few years ago.
- Humane policy for domestic animals: Manypenny was recognized by the Federation of Humane Organizations of West Virginia in April 2014 for his support of legislation to fund spay/neutering as population control in addition to euthanasia, the current default.

I don't agree with him on everything. But he is a straight shooter. He seeks constituent input and listens. We need him in Charleston.

Looks like refuge in city disappearing real fast

Pardon me, my cynicism is showing. All the troops are rallying around the "stop the madness" engine that is gathering steam.

Every time the city has had to endure the type of behavior that we witnessed after the game Oct. 18, here come the tribes to pow-wow, waxing eloquent in their indignation, beating the drums of action plans, legislation and proactive prevention.

Has anybody heard this before? I apologize to those with the city's leadership and the university reps who are attempting to effect some real cultural change here.

I call on them to look this problem dead in the eye and call it what it is - WVU leadership's blatant disregard for the town it lives in.

As long as we keep offering up our tax dollars and our evershrinking and exhausted resources; as long as we are willing to relinquish our once proud reputation as one of America's best small cities to this seemingly insatiable monstrosity that WVU has become, I am afraid for the future of this town as a destination for people who want to make this lies, or spend their retirement years here.

I am afraid that the town I left the craziness of Washington, D.C., for 22 years ago to find refuge in is disappearing before my eyes.

Time to bring back the bus after ball games

I was born and raised in Morgantown, and after reading articles regarding the riots in Morgantown after Oct. 18's football game, I suggest: "Bring back the bus."

For those of you who do not remember the 1980s, the Morgantown Police Department took a bus into the Sunnyside neighborhood and loaded it up with "disruptive" students.

This bus was loaded several times after football games. Those on the bus were taken to the police station and dealt with accordingly.

While I applaud modern technology in identifying those responsible for disorderly conduct and other offenses after a game, I can see the benefit in using immediate apprehension to identify those responsible. The bus gave officers a place to take a time out, and once the guilty parties were loaded on the bus, officers were left on the scene. The bus was a mobile unit so it could go anywhere it was needed.

There was no need for "extra" officers because days off were canceled, and if an officer was sick, they needed a doctor's excuse. So everyone worked the ball games and knew this months in advance.

I read where eight people were arrested, but all of them were not charged with destruction of property.

Who pays for the damage to emergency vehicles, city Dumpsters and sign posts and signs? And what stops the others who did the damage and did not get caught from doing the same thing next game?

My husband was a Morgantown police officer who served from 1967 until his retirement, as captain, in 1988. He worked on the bus and spent every home game working all night and into the next morning.

He also was a member of the WVU Police Department and spent every weekend working traffic before and after the football games.

Maybe if we tried using this "bus," more people could be held responsible for their actions and fined accordingly. Just saying — sometimes the old ways are the best.

Reinvest all of the timber revenues into forest

BY MICHAEL K. CALLEN

Monday's The Dominion Post included a letter from the Coopers Rock Foundation concerning proposed timbering at Coopers Rock.

As a lifelong resident of Monongalia County, I have enjoyed Coopers Rock State Forest for decades and would like to see it properly managed.

First, I wholeheartedly agree that revenues from this timbering should be reinvested into the forest. I would further suggest that the Foundation request that all the revenues be reinvested into the forest, since they are being generated by trees taken from the forest, rather than the 25 percent the Foundation is requesting.

Secondly, I wholeheartedly agree with applying sound timbering principles, including "best practices," in removing mature timber from the forest. I get the impression the Foundation would like to see no timbering at all, but this viewpoint is based on an incorrect understanding of what constitutes healthy biodiversity. First, it should be noted that Coopers Rock is a state forest, not a state park. People like to see mature forest with little brush or other undergrowth. I agree such parklike settings are beautiful; however, there is little biodiversity in such a uniformly aged forest. Also, it is unhealthy for wildlife. Any wildlife biologist will tell you that to maintain healthy wildlife populations, a forest must have a wide variety of different-aged tree groups.

While I think clear-cutting is ugly for a while, in fact, brushy clear-cut areas are vital for ground-nesting birds and also for other animals such as deer.

Especially with the fairly recent return of coyotes to the area, doe need thick brush in which to have and hide their young. Fawns are vulnerable to predators in their first few weeks, and without the thick brush that comes from heavy timbering, they really don't stand a chance. The same goes for ground-nesting birds such as wild turkeys. The hen is at great risk during the weeks she sits on the nest, and once the eggs are hatched, the chicks are also vulnerable to predators.

In addition to providing birthing areas, brushy clear-cut areas also provide needed food during the winter when food supplies are short.

The young, tender sprouts provide food for deer and a variety of animals and birds. Once the trees grow up and mature, their bark becomes tougher and the animals cannot reach the buds. It's nice to have acorns from the mature oaks, but those acorns only last a few months. They can't carry wildlife through the entire winter.

I support a timbering plan that calls for regular timbering rotations in the life span of trees.

It makes no sense to let a valuable resource like mature oak trees rot on the stump, and it's not good for wildlife either. I also support reinvesting 100 percent of the proceeds back into the forest.

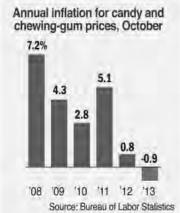

MICHAEL K. CALLEN is a local businessman, lifelong hunter and outdoorsman. He lives in Morgantown. This commentary should be considered another point of view and not necessarily the opinion or editorial policy of The Dominion Post.

Too-weak inflation is a bogeyman for economists, but it could also be a boon for trick-or-treating goblins. Lower sugar prices are keeping candy prices in check, which could mean fuller trick-or-treat bags this Halloween: IHS Global Insight forecasts candy prices will be just 0.2 percent higher this October than a year ago.

It's a symptom of low inflation around the world. Inflation is so weak that economists worry some regions, particularly Europe, could fall into deflation. They're concerned that a vicious cycle could begin in which shoppers hold off on purchases in hopes of lower prices, in turn forcing companies to cut wages or lay off more workers.

Home improvement?

Shares of Home Depot, Lowe's and Sherwin Williams all rose to an all-time high in this week's stock market rally.

These home-improvement related stocks have all continued to surpass the performance of the Standard & Poor's 500 index, even as the housing market's recovery has sent mixed signals.

One possible note of caution: Harvard University's Joint Center for Housing Studies has said that its leading indicator of remodeling activity projects that the annual growth rate of home improvement spending will slow down in the year ahead. It's expected to decline to 3.1 percent through the second quarter of 2015. For the third quarter of this year, the indicator projects total spending of $139.3 billion, reflecting year-over-year growth of 6.1 percent.

All-time highs These stocks have all reached new heights, but have yet to report 3Q earnings.

Reinventing Panera

InsiderQ&A

Blaine Hurst

Executive Vice President of Technology and Transforma-tion, Panera Bread

His insight: Reimagining Panera in a competitive market

Panera Bread is revamping its restaurants to make it easier for customers to order and pick up their

Among the changes in the store design called "Panera 2.0" are kiosks to accept orders on touchscreens, and shelves where diners can pick up to-go orders that were placed ahead of time. The changes are seen as a critical way to boost Panera's slowing sales growth.

Blaine Hurst, Panera's executive vice president of technology and transformation, said the company is on track to convert 100 of its 1,800 locations by the end of the year. Investors are looking for progress as the company's stock has declined 5 percent this year. Hurst shared insights on how the transformation is going.

When do you expect all Panera cafes to be converted?

We're not sure yet. It will be into 2016. The question is, does it go beyond 2016? We have internal things we're working through. When we invest in a cafe, we have to retrain everybody. We change the way that cafe operates dramatically. We're going to push this as hard and fast as it makes sense. But we've got to make sure we're ready.

Do sales increase significantly after stores are revamped? We run into a point with the 2.0 cafes where we see the sales truly outpace the non-converted stores. We're not talking specific numbers,

If you're able to handle a higher volume of orders, doesn't that pressure the kitchen and increase the chance for mistakes?

but we're seeing high single-digit differences in comparable sales.

The dirty little secret of most restaurants is that 10 to 15 percent of orders are inaccurately made. In the cafes, you can take it up and we fix it. You take it in the bag and you go home, that doesn't work.

As we started talking about online and digital ordering, we also looked at production and how we improve accuracy. Little things like the prep table bar, Normally, there's a button workers push that says "next" (after they make the order). Well, we have two buttons. One says "modify," one says "next." If there's no change to the salad you're making, the worker presses the "next" button. If there's a change, they press the "modify" button. By the simple mental note that I have to press the "modify" button, it triggers my mind, "Did I make that modification?"

You're testing "small order" deliveries of $5 or more. When does it make sense for a food chain to get into the delivery business?

There are two things. The average Panera delivery order is over $20. It's also our product. Our products travel well. I don't necessarily want french fries delivered to my house. But a Panera salad? A Panera sandwich? Our soups? They're packaged to go.

All five of Greer Industries Inc.'s mining companies received a Certificate of Achievement in Safety from the Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) for their 2013 No Days Lost Injury incident rates.

The awards were issued as follows: Greer Limestone Co., large metal/nonmetal mill group, 82,945 manhours worked; Greer Lime Co., large quarry group, 27,428 man-hours worked; Buckeye Stone Co., small metal/nonmetal mill group, 12,161 man-hours worked; Cheat River Limestone Co., small metal/nonmetal mill group, 12,995 man-hours worked; and Decker's Creek Limestone Co., large metal/nonmetal mill group, 25,444 man-hours worked.

Under the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977, active and intermittently active mineral mining operations are required to report injury and employment data to be eligible to receive the MSHA Certificate of Achievement in Safety Awards.

Qualification for an award requires mining operations to report data to MSHA for the calendar quarter in which it was active during the calendar year; to have not experienced a work injury in the designated subunits that resulted in a fatality, permanent disability, days away from work or days of restricted work activity; to have a No Days Lost (NDL) injury incidence rate (degree 6) no greater than the national incidence rate for these same subunits; and to have accumulated at least 4,000 employee-hours in these same subunits during the calendar year.

Mark Wilson, vice president of safety and human resources, said, "I am very proud of our employees and the job they are doing with safety. This is the first time in my career that all five Greer Companies were recognized in the same year for their No-Days-Lost safety records in MSHA's designated subunits. Avoiding lost time accidents in the mining industry is a difficult task and our employees understand what it takes."

Professional assistance recommended to establish a trust

volve the expertise of more than one type of professional adviser. Don't let that scare you off. Legal and financial analyses start the process, but often, trust and insurance considerations play a part as well.

In general, any revocable or irrevocable trust is established to put conditions on the assets owned by the trust to control who receives how much and when. An individual will no longer own the assets; the trust will, but the assets in the trust will benefit one or more people or entities.

Trusts can be set up during a person's lifetime or through his or her estate.

A variety of purposes can be served through revocable and irrevocable trusts. The main advantages are tax benefits, control of the assets for a period of time, and the potential for professional management of the assets

During one's life, an irrevocable trust can be used to transfer assets as a way to reduce estate taxes later and receive financial benefits from the assets now.

A trust created through a person's estate can be used to shelter the amount of assets (currently up to $5.34 million per estate) not subject to estate taxes. Those trust assets can provide income and support for the surviving spouse after the first spouse's death and assure professional asset management if the remaining spouse would ben-the trust assets will pass to the children when the second spouse dies.

For those concerned about wasteful use of an inheritance, a trust can impose income limitations and spendthrift restrictions to preserve assets long-term.

For future educational expenses, a trust can be helpful, although Section 529 plans are simpler overall.

A trust can be the owner of a life insurance policy. The proceeds will be paid to the listed beneficiaries without being a part of the policy owner's estate for taxation purposes.

To support those with special needs, a trust can provide auxiliary funds.

Finding the right organization or person to serve as trustee for administration, management and investment purposes is as important as are the trust's terms.

Trusts can also serve a charitable purpose while benefiting loved ones first. The terms of your will or revocable trust can create a charitable trust that will provide income for your spouse, children or others and earn an estate tax deduction.

When the income payout ends, the remaining funds will carry out the charitable purpose you specified years before to help the organization carry out its important goals.

Trusts are not a do-ityourself project. Seeking professional assistance from an attorney or a financial institution's trust department can assure the trust complies with state law and other requirements.

That's good planning.

Nonprofit helps fight Ebola with solar lights

Submitted to The Dominion Post

New Vision Renewable Energy, a West Virginia nonprofit, is joining the fight to contain and treat the deadly Ebola virus. New Vision produces solar lights that can illuminate entire rooms, but the organization needs funds to produce more lights.

Recently, New Vision was contacted by Alphonso Quamele, executive director of Family Line Foundation Ministries in the cities of Paynesville and Monrovia, Liberia, about sending lights to the organization. He is working with community youth to help get the word out about prevention and help health care workers identify Ebola victims. They need solar lights for the Liberian youth to distribute to the community and portable solar lights for the health-care workers to use for their nightly visits.

Quamele reported that hospitals and clinics are overwhelmed and sending patients away. With 90 percent of the nation living without electricity, families and small clinics must shut down at dark or try to administer IVs and medications to fight the fevers as they spike at night, using just the light of candles or kerosene lamps that emit toxic fumes.

New Vision is investing its money in a new prototype whole-room solar light — designed with the help of 3M scientists — to create a brighter light with a more powerful battery that is portable and can hang from the ceiling to light an entire room. The solar-powered battery also charges mobile phones, helping rural communities to communicate.

Maui voters to decide whether to ban GMO crops

Associated Press

HONOLULU — Dozens of Maui mothers are going door-to-door to urge voters to back a ban on the cultivation of genetically engineered crops because they think they are unsafe.

A group backed by companies growing the crops counters with ads playing heavily on the airwaves that urge rejection of what they are calling the "farming ban."

The dueling campaigns over a Nov. 4 ballot measure that would prohibit the growing of genetically modified organisms until studies show they're safe isn't just a local issue in a county of only 160,000 residents in the middle of the Pacific Ocean.

Experts say the ban's effects could ripple across the nation because some of the world's largest corn-seed producers research and develop new varieties of genetically engineered seeds at their farms in the county.

Kendall Lamkey, chairman of the agronomy department at Iowa State University, said the initiative if passed — could potentially make seed development more expensive for Monsanto Co. and a Dow Chemical Co. subsidiary, Dow AgroSciences.

"It's not going to stop it, but it will slow it down," Lamkey said. The companies will "adapt. I mean, there will probably be workarounds for this that may or may not cost more money and may or may not raise the cost of goods to

About 90 percent of all corn grown in the U.S. is genetically engineered and has been developed partially at farms in Hawaii.

There has been little scientific evidence showing foods grown from GMO seeds are less safe than their conventional counterparts. But fears persist in Hawaii and elsewhere.

In the islands, those concerns are compounded by worries about the companies' use of pesticides.

Home state claim may change with new information

Being an Army brat, I've always had trouble with the question "So, where are you from?"

"Well," I usually say, "I was born in Denver, Colorado. But from there we moved to California, then Texas. Then we moved to Maryland before leaving for Germany for three years and then moving back to Maryland. Then I came here to go to college and somehow never managed to leave. So, I don't know. I guess Maryland?"

The reason, I figure, is that it's where I spent my formative years, such as they were — those salad days of teenage angst and "recycled" jeans from Urban Outfitters in Georgetown. Also, I seem to have what more than a few people have referred to as a "total D.C. area thing," which, trust me, even I'm not deluded enough to think is a compliment. But in many ways, I suppose it's true.

Oftentimes, however, the person asking will wonder why, having lived here for more than 20 years now, I don't claim this state instead. After all, my stint here has been longer than anywhere else—even my adopted hometown of Silver Spring. So shouldn't I just consider myself an honorary West Virginian by now?

Meh. Maybe. But I've just never really felt like I'm from here. And being fairly rootless all my life, I've always found it hard to relate to the overwhelming pride most natives of this place have.

That is, perhaps, until now.
Because while I might not ever understand how in the world calling a Coke a "pop" is a thing, I can totally get down with this newfound Mountain State fact: West Virginians rent more horror movies than

I was alerted to this awesome piece of information only a few days ago, when an email appeared in my inbox with the subject line, "Redbox Survey Shows West Virginia Is Among the Top States for Scary Thrills."

Apparently the PR folks for the video kiosk company took a survey as part of their Halloween promotions. The result being that among the top 10 horror-renting states, seven of them fall in the South. And though I don't necessarily support the idea of West Virginia strictly counting as the "South," I'm not going to argue with numbers that put me, and my fellow residents, at the top of the horror-watching heap.

I mean, I am the girl who watches the original "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre" whenever she needs some cheering up. And who has been seriously considering, on my friend Darrin's brilliant suggestion, getting a Leatherface tattoo somewhere on my person.

So yeah, I'll throw my hat in with the West Virginians if there's a scary-movie-fan title on the line.

In case you were wondering, the next biggest nightmare buffs are (in order), Mississippi, Kentucky, Louisiana, Alabama, Ohio, Arizona, Tennessee, Pennsylvania and Oklahoma.

Man, Maryland didn't even make the list. May be time to rethink this whole loyalties thing.

Honestly, I've always hated crabs, anyway. And Old Bay on fries is gross.

Blue cheese, on the other hand, is delicious.

So, really, if I have to be from somewhere, I guess West Virginia — where the condiments are creamy and the movies bloody — may just be where I belong after all.

Happy Halloween, my new homies.

'Little Dancer' musical readies for opening in D.C.

WASHINGTON — "Little Dancer Aged Fourteen,' a famous sculpture by Edgar Degas that can be seen in museums around the world, is coming to life in a new musical exploring the story of a mysterious 14year-old dancer and the artist who portrayed her.

The production imagines the story of Marie van Goethem, a struggling dancer in the world of the Paris Opera Ballet in the late 1800s when dancing represented a chance at escaping poverty. Degas took an interest in dancers for his paintings and sculptures, leaving behind images of young ballerinas popular more than a century later.

The $7 million Kennedy Center musical opens Saturday for previews and runs through Nov. 20 in Washington.

It's the brainchild of the Broadway team of playwright and lyricist Lynn Ahrens, composer Stephen Flaherty and director and choreographer Susan Stroman. The show was born out of their love of dance and an interest in one of the most important sculptures at the National Gallery of Art.

"I would wonder about that little girl," Stroman said during a recent visit to the museum. "Like, 'Who was she? Why did he choose her?' She looked different from all the other ballerinas that he would paint, and you could tell that she had spirit, she had character."

Degas, played by Tony Award-winning actor Boyd Gaines, made the wax-andclay sculpture between 1878 and 1881 as his eyesight began to fade. The piece was cast in bronze and circulated widely after the artist died, making it a fixture in museums.

Parts of the story are based on writings left by Degas and American artist Mary Cassatt, who collaborated with him and who figures in the story as a strong woman amid a rising feminist movement.

When Degas exhibited his sculpture, critics disapproved, saying he created a homely specimen. Later, his young subject was fired from the ballet, though it's not clear why. She disappears from the records, curators said. That gave Ahrens an opening to create the rest of Marie's story.

Stroman and Ahrens said they grew up seeing Degas' images of dancers. Ahrens would pose like the "Little Dancer" as a girl.

"For every little girl, every dancer, everybody who loves art ... they know the face of that tough little girl," Ahrens said. "But they don't know her name."

The story is a unique concept, crossing art forms with a music-and-dance-infused story inspired by a 130-year-old artwork that was inspired by the ballet. It's a risk for the Kennedy Center in seeking to draw a crowd and to recoup its costs from often disparate audiences for theater, dance and fine art.

Stroman Broadway credits include "The Producers," "Contact" and "The Music Man" — said she is one of the few people bridging genres as a lover of both ballet and musical theater. But she hopes "Little Dancer" will appeal more widely.

"What I'm hoping for is that someone who loves the ballet will want to come see a story about a ballet dancer in Paris and then someone who loves art will come to see the real story about the sculpture and then someone who loves musical theater will come because of that," she said.

Tiler Peck, the New York City Ballet principal dancer who plays the young Marie, has visited the sculpture twice since rehearsals moved to Wash-

"I want to make sure I get it as perfectly as possible and to be as true to the sculpture as I can," she said. "To be able to see exactly how her hands are clasped and what her hair looked like, where the ribbon was placed."

MONSTER

ing to Burns, because many West Virginians came from Eastern European ancestry, the stories of bloodsucking demons were often told around fires. "In my research, there is only one vampire story that I have discovered from West Virginia, and that being about a child vampire that allegedly rose from his grave in a Morgantown cemetery. The body had been buried for nearly 80 years, and yet looked like it was buried the day before. The story has some vampiric characteristics (such as the dead having a youthful appearance), but the story does not tell that the vampire attacked anyone." Burns said.

Werewolves

"The ancient Greek traveler, Herodotus, mentioned a tribe of werewolves in his book, 'Histories' written between 450-420 B.C.," Burns said. "This is an ancient legend, like the vampire, but it hit its height of popularity during the Middle Ages in Europe."

Werewolf hunts were popular, just like witch hunts, he said.

"The idea of lycanthropy, the act of being afflicted with a disease or a curse that caused you to turn into a werewolf, was a common belief. The legends grew from that point on until it began to arise in literature, such as Clemence Annie Housman's novel, 'The Werewolf' in 1896," Burns said.

Often, the shapeshifter legends of American Indian tribes included beings who could change into wolves or other creatures.

The Mountain State connection: "Within the confines of West Virginia folklore, werewolves exist alongside the legend of Bigfoot," Burns said. While Bigfoot is often perceived as a legend of the Pacific Northwest, several counties in West Virginia also have had Bigfoot sightings, including Tucker, Pendleton, Randolph and Pocahontas. "The only known actual werewolf

WVU's Mountaineer Week will host the annual WVU Ghost Tour at 7 p.m. Monday. The tour will begin with a reception in the main lounge on the first floor of E. Moore Hall on WVU's Downtown Campus. Conducting the tour will be West Virginia storyteller Jason Burns, whose award-winning performances have taken place all across the state at various schools, conferences, churches, libraries, festivals and other events. Burns is the driving force behind The West Virginia Spectral Heritage Project, which seeks out, researches, records, and performs ghost and monster stories from around West Virginia. To this date, the project has collected nearly 500 ghost and monster stories from West Virginia.

The tour will last for about 1 1/2 to 2 hours, so good walking shoes and a light jacket are recommended. Burns also recommends personal discretion when bringing small children or others who may be affected by the stories. #### Zombies

Nearly as popular as the vampire these days, the stories of the undead can be traced back to Africa.

"The word 'zombie' probably comes from the word 'nzambi' — a word from the Kongo language of Central Africa that means 'god.' This tradition was undoubtedly brought with the slave trade to the Caribbean, where it and other storytelling traditions combined to form the Voodoo religion's zombie," Burns said.

The Mountain State connection: There are some zombie tales found in the hills of Appalachia. "For instance, there is a story of a zombie that terrorized the Parkersburg Riverfront during the late 1800s," Burns said.

"The idea of a mummy as an undead creature was originated during the Georgian era in a book called 'The Mummy! Or a Tale of the 22nd Century" by Jane C. Loudon in 1827," Burns said. "The mummy reached its height of popularity after the opening of King Tut's tomb by Howard Carter in 1922, and by the 1940s Hollywood had made the Mummy part of our modern folklore."

The Mountain State connection: "West Virginia has mummies, which were created by a local scientist, Graham Hamrick, by using what he called the 'biblical method of mummification' on two cadavers from the TransAllegheny Lunatic Asylum," Burns said. The mummies are on display at the Barbour County History Museum. in Philippi.

Witches

"Witches are another old legend, which is found in every culture on Earth," Burns said. "Beginning in ancient times, the dark ages saw the height of belief in witches, and the persecution/systematic murder of thousands during the witch hunts in Europe."

Today, witchcraft is a common practice, one that is protected by the Constitution, Burns said, like all religions.

"Movies have skewed the legends of witches and witchcraft," he said.

The Mountain State connection: Burns' family, who were from Pendleton County, often told him stories about witches and magic. "Probably the most popular witch story in West Virginia, however, is the story of Serilda, the Highland Witch," Burns said. Serilda lived near Mannington, he said, and is buried in Highland Cemetery.

More W.Va. monsters

Anyone who's watched "Mountain Monsters" on Destination America may be familiar with some of the creatures said to roam the hills of Appalachia.

The Mothman of Point Pleasant, for instance, was said to be a large, bird-like creature with glowing red eyes that appeared to many residents in the 1960s.

Other West Virginia monster legends include the Grafton Monster, Flatwoods Monster, Sheepsquatch, Bighoot (a giant owl), giant cats and Thunderbirds. Even Morgantown legend includes the Ogua, the state's only water monster, Burns said. That creature is said to inhabit the Monongahela River.

Mick Jagger, the film producer, heads to work

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Song credits won't be the latest place to feature Mick Jagger's name. Instead, look to upcoming films and TV shows. The Rolling Stones frontman has been busy producing projects, from this year's James Brown biopic "Get on Up" to a not-yet-titled HBO series directed by Martin Scorsese.

Jagger is also behind the HBO documentary "Mr. Dynamite: The Rise of James Brown," which debuts Monday (9 p.m. EDT). The rock icon said he was asked to produce the documentary before the film.

ı was realiy interested, but I was kind of a bit documentary-ed out at that point," the 71-year-old said with a laugh, explaining that he was asked to produce "Mr. Dynamite" around the time he finished working on the 2012 Stones' documentary, "Crossfire Hurricane."

"It's very time-consuming ... but I said, 'Yeah and I'd really like to do the documentary.' woke up the next morning and thought a feature film would be a great idea."

Jagger asked Oscarwinning director Alex Gibnev to work on the documentary, which takes an overarching look at the Godfather of Soul's life. Brown died in 2006, at 73.

"The fact that we were doing it after Mr. Brown had passed allowed people to be a little bit more free about talking about him," Gibney said.

Gibney, whose credits include "Taxi to the Dark Side," said he enjoyed collaborating with Jagger.

"I heard some things that made me nervous, but I had a great time. He's a good producer," he said. "I just heard rumbles ... but I didn't find that to be the case. Just the opposite."

Jagger's other upcoming production projects include films the "Tabloid" and "The Tiny Problems of White People" with Colin Firth. He'll play rescheduled dates with the Stones in Australia starting Saturday, and said in a recent interview that his production duties have helped him deal with his tumultuous year following the suicide of his longtime partner, L'Wren Scott.

AP: What was your relationship with James Brown?

Jagger: I'm not claiming that we were buddies (laughs), but I met him early on in my career. When I first came to New York ... I went to the Apollo and I spent the day there ... I introduced myself to him, I'm sure he had no clue (who I was) ... But he was very, very nice to me. Very generous.

AP: How influential was Brown?

Jagger: He was such a big influence on all kinds of music. He was influential on performers that came later like Michael Jackson, Prince, and then the beginning of hiphop and so forth. But he was also influential (on) every band, every rock band, (they) didn't necessarily play all James Brown numbers, but we all knew them.

AP: The documentary focuses on his music and activism, but it also touches on domestic violence, which was glossed over in the film.

Jagger: I think Alex wanted to concentrate really on the two areas (music and activism) ... without ignoring the other areas. We could have made a whole movie (on), 'Was James Brown a drug addict and wife abuser?' but that's the negativity and I don't think you want to be ... white-washing people. but you don't want to be turning up their negative side. And really we wanted to explore James Brown the musician, the performer. We wanted to explore James Brown the activist, because those we really interesting times. A lot of people obviously didn't live through them and a lot of people forget, me included, so we didn't heavy-hand the negativity of it.

AP: What other musicians would you like to do a documentary about?

Jagger: I have been asked to be involved in producing a movie on an adolescent Elvis ... so that's in the works. And I'm doing a series on HBO which is very much music-orientated. It's fictional drama. The lead character is the owner of a record company and it's about his life.

AP: Are you going to appear on the HBO series?

Jagger: I'm not in it. It's a story I worked on with Marty (Scorsese). ... It was going to be a movie and then we made it into a TV series. ... The action starts in 1973 in New York so it's a kind of a weird time because it's like the beginning of punk, the very beginning of hip-hop and so a lot is going on.

WVU event honors patients and caregivers

THE THREE PATIENTS honored at the WVU Healthcare Jon Michael Moore Trauma Center's fifth annual Night of Recognition are walking miracles. At the event, held Oct. 9 in Morgantown, the patients and representatives from each stage of their care were presented with a Cornerstone of Recovery Award. About 75 awards were presented.

"More often than not, our patients have no idea how many people it takes to get them from the scene of their accidents through treatment and recovery. This event gives us the opportunity to show them how much of a team effort went into getting them where they are today," said Dr. Alison Wilson, director of the Jon Michael Moore Trauma Center and vice chair and Skewes Family Chair for Trauma in the WVU Department of Surgery. "We also get the chance to thank those individuals for the very critical role each one plays in the trauma system."

Refusing to forgive only keeps pain fresh

Q: I was raised in the Episcopal Church, and even though a good Christian will forgive someone who's hurt you, I'm having a very difficult time forgiving my ex-husband for all he did to hurt our two daughters. He's never asked for my forgiveness. However, last year, at his stepson's wedding, he finally told the girls he was sorry for everything - after 36 years! How can I forgive when I still hold so much anger? -L., Raleigh, N.C.

A: I often receive questions about forgiveness and I ask them in my own spiritual life. Your understandable anger at your exhusband can't be disposed of by a few words from me, or even by his apology to your daughters.

When I teach children about forgiveness. I have them watch as I pound nails into a board. I tell them to think of each nail as a bad thing someone does to another person. They're usually upset about the pounding. Then I pull out the nails and ask GOD SQUAD RABBI MARC GELLMAN them to think of that as what happens when we say we're sorry for each bad thing we've done.

They're usually smiling by then because they realize there's something they can do to make things right. Then I show them the board with all the nail holes in it and ask how we could get rid of the holes. They have no idea and I admit I have no idea, either. The holes will always be there, I point out. Even if we put filler in them, we'd still see the outlines of the holes.

In a quiet but serious voice, I explain to them that this is why we have to be so careful not to hurt anyone because it always leaves a hole behind.

Now, I know this all sounds grim and despairing, but it's important to feel what happens when you hurt others. However (and this is a lesson children are generally not mature enough to absorb), at some point we must let go of our anger at being hurt. Holding on to it is like drinking poison and expecting the other person to die. Forgiveness is obviously something we do for the person who's hurt us, but it's also something we do to save ourselves from further spiritual corrosion.

So there it is, one of the most enduring contradictions of the human condition: We cannot forgive because we're broken, yet we must forgive to avoid being broken more. Furthermore, we can't simply forgive; we must also agree to heal up and move on with life.

contradiction becomes unbearable (you are there now) is precisely the point where religion enters our lives with a message of divine grace (Hebrew: Hesed). Our faiths teach us in different ways, but to the same effect, that if God can forgive us, then we can forgive each other.

The moment when this

You don't have to be religious to resolve this contradiction, but we must find our way through, not around, our brokenness into a more forgiving place. As Hemingway wrote in "A Farewell to Arms": "Everyone is broken but some become stronger at the broken places.'

Now is your time to decide if you'll become stronger at your broken places. I completely understand if you want to cling to your anger because your ex-husband has not apologized to you, but over time your choice will have less to do with him and more to do with you and the spiritual consequences of holding onto your anger.

I can tell you that my decisions to forgive others who've hurt me were not the fruit of any great virtue or compassion, but based on the fact that I can't swim through the often rough waters of life while hanging onto a heavy stone.

Survey: Harassment a common part of online life

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A new study confirms what many Internet users know all too well: Harassment is a common part of online life.

The first-of-its-kind report by the Pew Research Center found that nearly three-quarters of American adults who use the Internet have witnessed online harassment. Forty percent have experienced it themselves.

The types of harassment Pew asked about range from name-calling to physical threats, sexual harassment and stalking. Half of those who were harassed said they didn't know the person who had most recently attacked them.

Young adults — people 18 to 29 — were the most likely age group to see and undergo online harassment. Women ages 18 to 24 were disproportionately the victims of stalking and sexual harassment, according to the survev. And people who have more information available about themselves online, work in the tech industry or promote themselves on the Internet, were also more likely to be harassed.

Case in point: Celebrities. Stars such as actress Jennifer Lawrence had nude photos stolen and posted online in a widespread hacking scandal in late August. Lawrence, 24, later told Vanity Fair that she considered looking at the pictures a sex crime.

It can be difficult for police to go after online bullies in part because "our legal system hasn't quite caught up with technology," said Elizabeth Dowdell, a nursing professor at Villanova University who studies online aggression. On top of that, adults are generally hesitant to report harassment because they might view it as a "child or teenage problem."

Catherine Devine, 22, reads instant messages on her laptop screen in 2011 at her home in Kings Park, N.Y. Devine had her first of several brushes with online harassment in seventh grade, before she'd even ventured onto the Internet.

"But the Internet has no age limits," Dowdell said. "People look for outlets for aggression and the Internet is a wonderful place because it's anonymous and you don't have to be truthful."

Social networking companies have sometimes been criticized for not doing enough to stop online harassment, even though it's standard policy to ban threats, bullying and harassment. But they have at least tried to respond to complaints.

Twitter, for example, changed its policy recently after some users sent crude, altered images of Robin Williams to his daughter Zelda following the actor's suicide in August. The company now says it can remove images of deceased individuals that circulate on its site.

Trendy new social networking site Ello, meanwhile, recently added tools people can use to block or mute users who are bothering them. The ad-free, decidedly anti-Facebook website was criticized early on for not providing blocking features that are standard practice for social networks.

Though online harassment is as old as the Internet itself, the Pew survey is particularly timely as conversations around it have grown louder in recent months and not just because of the celebrity hacking scandal. Beginning this summer, people involved in an online campaign dubbed "Gamergate" have been harassing several prominent women in the video game industry and their supporters for criticizing the lack of diversity and how women are portrayed in games. One of the targets is Brianna Wu, a software engineer and founder of game developer Giant Spacekat. Wu, who is in her mid-30s, said she has frequently been harassed online, but it's gotten worse this year.

Earlier this month, people threatened her and her husband with rape, death and castration on Twitter and posted her address online, she said, and they have been trying to impersonate her on the Internet to smear her reputation. She got so frightened that she left her home in Boston.

Wu went to the police, but most people harassed online don't. According to Pew. just 5 percent of those who were harassed reported the incident to law enforcement, while nearly half confronted the person online. Forty-four percent said they unfriended or blocked the person.

But victims of harassment often don't know where it's coming from. Thirty-eight percent of people who were harassed online said a stranger was behind the threats, and another 26 percent didn't know who the person was.

'You can have many different (personas) online," Dowdell said. "So you might think 'I'm going to block Scaryfriend123' and Scaryfriend says 'Fine, I'm going to use my other name Superniceguy' and you just don't know."

Studies support chiropractic treatment for neck pain

Q: I am considering going to a doctor of chiropractic for my neck pain. Can you tell me about any studies that show how it compares to other options?

A: Patients with chronic neck pain — defined as pain lasting at least eight weeks — got significant benefit from chiropractic adjustments, according to a recent report in the Journal of Manipulative and Physiological Therapeutics. The report was based on a review of nine previously published trials.

After getting therapy for chronic neck pain, the nine trials reviewed showed that all trial groups showed positive changes up to 12 weeks after the end of treatment. And no group reported any major adverse effects. Another study pub-

This study categorized dozens of treatment options for neck pain as "strong evidence" of effectiveness to "no evidence" of effectiveness, and two or three categories in the

The only therapy listed as "strong evidence" was the combination of chiropractic manipulation and physical therapy (for mechanical neck pain with and without radiculopathy). This study included review comparisons of just about every other type of treatment option I have heard of, from acupuncture to NSAIDS to narcotics, and everything in between.

That is truly impressive, in my opinion — but I see that kind of result every day so it is not surprising to me.

Neck pain is a relatively common affliction, with some 15 percent of women and 10 percent of men estimated to have chronic neck pain at any one time, according to the American Chiropractic Association. Spinal manipulation, also referred to as a chiropractic adjustment, is the practice of making sure vertebrae, the bones that make up the spine, have proper alignment and motion. The Journal of Manipulative and Physiological Therapeutics is the leading publication in the field of chiropractic and is the official scientific journal of the American Chiropractic Association. The Journal of Rheumatology is a longtime favorite of the medical field and has been a point of reference across multiple specialties for years.

Need a scare? Try a haunted hayride in Pa.

WHEN I WAS A GIRL SCOUT, my troop decided to go on a haunted hayride.

The place we headed to was along Pa. 51 on the way to Pittsburgh. When we arrived at the large farm, I remember sitting around a bonfire with my other Girl Scout friends, waiting for our turn to get on the wagon.

A woman dressed as a witch approached me, cooing and cackling over my long hair. Of course, as a little girl, she creeped me out, but I tried to remain calm, acting like I wasn't afraid of her.

That level of nonchalance was impossible to keep once we boarded the wagon and began the hayride — because I'd never been so scared in my life.

The sides of the wagon were closed in by several horizontal bars, designed, I suppose, to keep the haybales from slipping off the sides during normal farm work. Those rails, though, meant that the folks who were scaring us could climb the sides of the wagon as it made its way through the farm fields.

Every few seconds, another ghoul would scale the sides of the wagon, reaching hands through to grab at us, and in some cases, sticking chainsaws in toward us.

Thank goodness my mom was there, because she knew how frightened I was and could warn me as she saw new scarers headed our way. So while I sat burrowed, smack dab in the middle of the wagon, I fared much better than some of my friends on the edges who had tears in their eyes.

Needless to say, my mom still says she remembers how scared we all were during that haunted hayride, so much so that she thought it was a bit too intense for a bunch of little girls. I was reminded of this story the other day when Jason, Ian and I headed up to Pittsburgh to go to a hockey game. Thinking that hayride was long gone, I was surprised to find that when we passed by the farm along Pa. 51, where we had that frightening experience, there was a sign out front touting Allen's Haunted Hayrides Curious, I Googled the Pennsylvania haunt and, yep, it's still going strong. In fact, this year it's celebrating its 35th anniversary.

If you're interested in going, Allen's Haunted Hayrides is at 2430 Pittsburgh Road, Smock, Pa. It's open from 7:30-9 p.m. Thursday, 7:30-10 p.m. Friday and 7:30-9 p.m. Saturday. Tickets are $15 per person, which includes the hayride and carnival rides. Children 3 and under ride free with an adult. You can even get your own bonfire for $30, which lasts two hours and accommodates up to 20 people. Visit allenshayrides.com for more information.

So if you're looking for one last scare this Halloween season, stop by Allen's. Just don't say I didn't warn you.

The new family portrait? 3D-printed statue selfies

NEW YORK — Walk into Eddie DaRoza's office and you'll find two of him there: The actual 32-yearold video producer, and a 5inch statuette of him.

"There are a lot of double takes. It's like a little action figure of myself," the Los Angeles native said.

He had the statue made on a lark. While waiting for his brother at a mall, he stepped into a studio that scanned his body and sent the scan off to a 3-D printer. These studios are popping up rapidly as 3-D scanning and printing technology gets more advanced. In New York City alone, there are at least four stores that offer the service, including three just in the past year. You can get scanned in just a few seconds and get your statue delivered in days.

The advent of digital cameras and smartphones killed the traditional mall portrait studio, but 3-D printing has sparked a new trend. Overloaded with digital photos, statues may be moving in to fulfill our desire for portraits that stand out.

Many of the customers of the statue studios are of their kids. Sylvain Preumont, who opened a New York branch of his London-based iMakr store parents who want statues this year, said a soldier's wife had their three children scanned so he could bring them to Afghanistan. Victor De Los Angeles.

owner of New York 3-D printing and scanning store Cubo, has scanned several pregnant women.

"I had a lady come in the day before she went into labor and she was like: 'I need it done today," " he said.

New York's Museum of Art and Design offered scans and statues earlier this year. Shapeways, the company that supplied the exhibit, said it scanned about 6,000 people and sold about 1,500 statues for $30. Woody Allen got himself scanned there, so it's now possible to buy a 3.5inch statue of a slumping Woody Allen in a cardigan. The Smithsonian Institution scanned President Barack Obama and revealed a 3-D printed bust of him this summer. It will be added to the National Portrait Gallery.

The typical 3-D-printed statue is printed in full color in a material known as "sandstone" — really, gypsum powder. It's glued together by color ink ejected from a head similar to the one found in an inkjet printer. The statues range from three to eight inches tall. The technology allows for a lot of variation in materials. IMakr offered chocolate statues for Easter. For 99 pounds, you got a box with six small chocolate likenesses of yourself.

Big businesses are getting into 3-D statuary as well, with Wal-Mart Stores Inc. at the forefront. In July, at a newly opened Sam's Club in Montgomery, Ill., and another outside Fort Worth, Texas, 3-D printers scanned shoppers' faces and placed resin printouts of their heads on action figure-sized bodies of one of three Marvel characters. Wal-Mart's British unit, ASDA, starting testing a service in November that lets customers buy 8-inch figurines of themselves for 60 pounds, or $100. The studio is now permanent in one store, and it's been so popular that the company is considering rolling it out to other locations.

"It's become the new family portrait," said AS-DA spokesman Russell

A Staples store in New York scans people's faces and puts them on NBA and Star Trek figurines. The goal of the pilot program is to get small businesses to use Staples Inc. for 3-D scanning and printing jobs, just like they've provided those services for paper.

Officials eye Ebola protocol for pets

Q: Can dogs and cats get the Ebola virus? If the answer is no, as I believe it is, why did they kill that dog from Spain? — S.H., Chica-

Q: I'm worried about a full-out Ebola epidemic eventually coming to America; it's inevitable. And since so many people in this country live with pets, what will happen to them? — J.K., Lubbock, Texas

Q: Will this be how it happens in America: When a family member is diagnosed with Ebola, pets will be killed and the rest of the family quarantined? I'm not sure as cases (of Ebola) mount that this is a viable plan. What is the plan for animals? -T.A., Louisville, Ky.

A: The American Veterinary Medical Association (AVMA) is working side by side with the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and various public health officials regarding the concerns expressed here about Ebola and animals — from the pets who share our beds to foodproducing animals.

Dr. Ron DeHaven, AV-MA CEO, said, "Like you, we've received many inquiries; certainly the public is concerned. We're working to create a specific protocol, though there remain many unknowns."

DeHaven continues, "What's challenging is that we don't know a lot about how Ebola behaves in various species. We do believe dogs can get Ebola. Dogs appear to mount an immune response so they don't get sick. The big question then is if they don't get sick from the virus, are they capable of spreading the virus to people or other animals? These are questions that we just don't have answers to."

Personally, rather than euthanizing the dog belonging to the Spanish victim of Ebola (earlier In October), I think it might have been more beneficial to human medicine and obviously for the dog's family to quarantine the animal.

After a necropsy (animal autopsy) is conducted, there's nothing more to be learned from a dead animal. A living dog may have offered clues. For example, if physicians and veterinarians can learn why dogs don't get sick from Ebola, this knowledge could be the key to creating more effective drugs and a vaccine for people. Also, had that dog been allowed to live, more might have been discovered regarding virus transmission from animals to people.

A Dallas, Texas, countv judge took a completely different route from the judge in Spain who ordered the dog there be euthanized. Instead, Dallas Ebola-stricken health care worker Nina Pham's dog — a King Charles Spaniel named Bentley - was moved to disused military and is under the care of Dallas Animal Services.

DeHaven warns, "Let's keep this all in perspective. In the U.S., human cases remain very isolated, and there have been no pets identified with Ebola."

Updates will be posted as they warrant at www.avma.org.

Q: We adopted a mixed-breed puppy who just doesn't like being in a crate. I don't like him being in a cage, either. Don't you agree? — A.A., Des Moines, Iowa

A: Frankly, I think it's cruel to allow a puppy, who doesn't know any better, to roam the house freely and potentially eat something that will make him sick, or make you sick by chewing on an expensive heirloom.

Aside from training your pup, you need to be "trained," or at least agree that a crate is a good idea when your dog is home alone. Also keep in mind that your dog may pick up on your anxiety about crating him.

Crates serve two purposes for pups: To keep them out of trouble and to fast-forward house training.

Feed your dog from the crate, and periodically drop treats into the crate. Before you begin leaving him alone in the crate, just leave the room where your pooch is crated. If the dog barks, demanding your return, don't comply. Wait until your pet is quiet and calm before removing him from the crate.

Ask your veterinarian about a calming pheromone product (Adaptil) and L-Theanine (Anxitane), both of which may lessen anxietv. Also, consider using a Thundershirt.

Each September, every Major League Baseball team is allowed to expand its roster of players from 25 to 40 active players. To fill the additional 15 spots, teams "call up," or promote, players in their minor league system.

Guilder (WHEEL-dare) Rodriguez became one of these "September call-ups" for the Texas Rangers, and lived out every ninor leaguer's dream: a chance to play in the big leagues. For this 31-year-old rookie, the dream became a reality after 13 seasons in the minors. After being signed in 2001, Guilder ppeared in 1,095 minor-league games – the most games eve played without a major league debut. In that time, he played for 10 different teams, had more than 4,000 at-bats, and saw time at every position except catcher —

On Sept. 22, with his wife and his father watching from the stands, Guilder recorded his first two major-league hits, includi a single in the seventh innning that knocked in the gamewinning run, setting off a wild celebration with his teammater

Yes, it's a fruit

One way of classifying pumpkins is by how they taste. We think of fruits as the sweet parts of plants. Pumpkins are not that sweet. That's why we see them as vegetables.

However, botanists, or plant scientists, organize plants by how they grow and look. In science, a pumpkin is a fruit.

Fruits grow from the female parts of flowers. They carry the seeds for Pumpkin farming is a risky business. Pumpkins can be easily harmed by disease, insects and weather.

Imagine you are a farmer growing pumpkins for jack-o'-lanterns. What if your pumpkins mature too early? By Halloween, you could be left with a lot of rotting pumpkins. If the pumpkins mature too late, you'll miss the Halloween rush.

People like to carry pumpkins by the stems. If the stems break off, people won't buy them. But if the stems are too big, they can damage the pumpkins next to them.

The skins need to be pretty, without big spots. If pumpkins are flat or weirdly shaped, people won't buy them. Size makes a difference.

Pumpkin past

Pumpkins are native to the Americas. The seeds have been found at 10,000-year-old sites in Mexico.

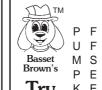

Native Americans ate the fruit, seeds, flowers and leaves. They roasted pumpkins in the fire or cooked the fruit in soups, puddings or a type of pie. By mixing the fruit with syrup, they made a kind of pumpkin jelly. They cut and dried strips of pumpkin fruit to preserve it.

After drying strips of the shell, people wove them together to make mats. They used whole pumpkin shells for bowls and storage vessels.

American Colonists soon caught on. Pumpkins became a top food.

Today's pumpkin pie recipe is much like the Colonists', calling for spices such as nutmeg and ainaer.

Some great national parks to enjoy for family trips

ASK MR. DAD

BY ARMIN BROTT

McClatchy-Tribune News Service (MCT)

Dear Mr. Dad: My family hasn't had a vacation in years — we haven't been able to afford it. But we really need some time off. We're thinking of doing a driving trip over the two-week winter break. Can you suggest some affordable familyfriendly places to visit?

A: Depending on where you live, there's a good chance you won't have to leave the state to find a super-low-cost, amazing vacation spot. I'm talking about our national parks, most of which offer a range of activities, from just plain fun to educational to knock-your-socks-off gorgeous hikes in nature. Whether you're planning to spend your whole vacation in one place or want to explore several locations, the National Park Foundation (nationalparks.org/) and the National Park Service (nps.gov/) can help you find a park that suits your needs. But here are a few favorites, some of which were sent in by readers.

Yellowstone

Yellowstone is the oldest national park in the country, and one of the largest and most diverse. It's also home to some of the most familiar natural features, including the Old Faithful geyser, and the Fountain Paint Pots. The main lodge is well worth exploring, but make sure to get in some hiking time on the park's many family-friendly trails.

Yosemite

I think the word "awesome" is way over-used (and misused). But it's the perfect word to describe Yosemite. My daughter and I just came back from four days there, biking, hiking, and just hanging out. The drought has reduced food supplies for deer, so they wander into campsites and will occasionally let people pet them. We also saw a few bears (which might let you pet them, but we didn't think it was worth the risk to find out) and dozens of other critters.

The sheer cliffs and soaring peaks are absolutely stunning.

Grand Teton

Grand Teton National Park has dozens of family-friendly trails, several of which are even walkable with a stroller, meaning that pretty much any family will be able to explore the mountains, woods, creeks, rivers, and meadows there. Be on the lookout for bears and moose.

Rocky Mountain

Not too far from Grand Teton (relatively speaking — it's actually about 500 miles), is Rocky Mountain National Park, which has hundreds of miles of trails, mirror-like lakes to canoe on, and dozens of mountains over 12,000 feet high. And of course, you'll also find an amazing variety of wildlife.

Theodore Roosevelt

Situated in the Badlands of North Dakota, Theodore Roosevelt National Park offers very different landscape — a jawdropping combination of plains and badlands, buttes and valleys. One of the big draws (besides the scenery) is the hundreds of bison that roam freely throughout the park.

These parks are just the tip of the iceberg — there are national parks in every state but one (Delaware). Not all are as spectacular as the ones above, but they're great ways to see some of the true wonders of the world.

Wherever you go, be sure check in with the park's Rangers when you get there. They'll be able to tell you about educational opportunities, organized hikes, and special warnings. Park Rangers know their stuff, so take those warning very, very seriously. Every year, about 150 people die and scores more are injured in national parks, often because they hiked, biked, swam, climbed, or tried to touch something they shouldn't have. And when they tell you not to keep food in your tent, cabin or car, listen. Don't believe me? Search YouTube for "bear breaking into car."

Ex-husband's new wife has different view of holidays

EX-ETIQUETTE

BY JANN BLACKSTONE McClatchy-Tribune News Service (MCT)

Q: How do I handle a difference in the way my ex and I celebrate holidays now that we have broken up? Although my children's father follows no particular religion, his new wife is a religion that does not celebrate holidays and is really downplaying the upcoming holiday season. We always celebrated and the kids expect it. With Halloween coming up, this is really difficult. What's good Ex-Etiquette?

A: The faith in which you bring up your children is one of those "musts" that should be discussed between couples well in advance of having children, but few know how to approach the subject if parents break-up and one changes their choice down the road.

In cases like this, my suggestion is to use the 10 rules of Good Ex-etiquette as your guide. Rule No. 4, "Biological parents make the rules, bonusparents uphold them" in practice means that if the biological parents made an agreement to raise a child in a particular faith — or no faith at all — that's the agreement that should be honored even if they break-up. The bonusparent really has nothing to do with that decision, and because he or she joined the club after the fact, it's their job to support the rules the parents have in place. If the practice in place goes against the new partner's moral or religious code, he or she should not have married someone who does not have similar beliefs. Bonusparents do not dictate policy.

But what if Dad has had a change of heart and now believes as his new wife does? If after discussion, you and dad can't agree on a solution, then good ex-etiquette suggests no changes should be made in the way the children celebrate. You stick to the original agreement unless both parents agree to change. This is not to say that dad and his new wife can't practice as they wish in their home in front of the children. They just have to be mindful to follow Good Ex-etiquette for Parents rule No. 3, "No badmouthing" and should not badmouth mother's beliefs. Your children will be exposed to two different philosophies. Teach them to respect both and it will not be as confusing for them as it would be if you undermine the other parent's beliefs in the name of being "right." Good Ex-etiauette rule No. 9, is "Respect each other's turf." Halloween is a particularly difficult holiday because while many religions treat it as a purely secular holiday, others do feel it has evil undertones - and the faith about which you speak does not celebrate it at all — which truly changes the game plan if your kids have always celebrated. And, much to their father's dismay, it would not be surprising if the kids gravitated to your home around this time of year because they are used to lots of holiday gaiety.

If that is true, try trading days. You get Halloween with the kids, he can have a long weekend, such as Memorial Day — not as a holiday to celebrate, but to simply have a special day with the kids. Start a tradition.

Now is the time to sell your property

HERE WE ARE in the middle of another WVU football season, and the hills of West Virginia are beautiful with vibrate fall colors. This also means that in another month, or hopefully two, that white frozen stuff will be flying to let us know winter is here.

There is no question that winter affects the real estate market. We have data from the National Association of Realtors and we can see it in our local MLS (Multiple Listing Service) data.

Also, it just makes sense that buyers do not want to go out and dodge snow drifts to look at homes, unless they have to.

Moving is hard enough on its own, you certainly don't need any additional adverse situations from Mother Nature such as icy roads or sub-freezing temperatures to challenge things.

This all being said, if you are thinking about selling you need to act now. Here is why.

- Demand is strong: Buyers do not want to move in the snow. If they want to buy before winter hits and they are looking now. In Monongalia County, we typically see on average a 16 percent increase in sales between now and the end of the year. Sellers have about 30 days to take advantage before the holiday season starts, and the median days on market for houses sold in the past six months is 28.
- Less competition: Housing inply is still under the historical number of six months' supply in all areas of Monongalia County, except the western portion of the county. This means that, in many markets, there are not enough homes for sale to satisfy the number of buyers in that market. This is good news for home prices. However, tvpically we will see an increase in inventory coming into the spring market.
- The process will be quicker: One of the biggest challenges of the 2014 housing market has been the length of time it takes from contract to closing. Banks are requiring more paperwork than ever. Typically we will see an increase delay with the process around the holidays.
- There has never been a better time to move up: Prices are projected to appreciate by more than 19 percent from now to 2018. You also can lock in your 30-year housing expense with an interest percentage rate in the low 4's or even high 3's right now. Rates are projected to be more than 5 percent by this time next year.

At some point it's time to move on. Nobody has a crystal ball, and we can only project based on data and trends to make quality decisions. At some point it's not always about the money, sometimes it's about moving on and doing what works for you and your family. You can only sell your home if it's listed.

Disney Mansion goes to spooky extremes in decorating

BY LISA LIDDANE

The Orange County Register (MCT)

ORANGE COUNTY, Calif. -No one around here decorates a house for Halloween quite like the creative minds behind the Haunted Mansion Holiday at Disneyland. It has been 14 years since the seasonal "Nightmare Before Christmas"-themed overlay was launched at the classic Haunted Mansion, and the ghoulish meets quirky meets elegant design continues to evolve as the designers tweak or add new features for a three-month run.

Black wreaths and garlands festooned with custom blackand-white ribbon, flowers and skulls deck the antebellum estate, while vases filled with seemingly dead arrangements accent the wall enclosing the "property." Inside the mansion, there's a 7-foot-tall gingerbread house that features a zombie gingerbread man flanked by candy cane spikes that's new this year. These are just a handful of the decorating ideas that can be adapted for real homes.

Brian Sandahl, senior art director for Haunted Mansion Holiday, recently met with the Register at the New Orleans Square attraction to discuss decorating ideas inspired by the 1993 Tim Burton cult film. Here are excerpts from that conversation:

Q. What are the signature decorative elements outside the mansion?

A. Black garland. We didn't even see black Christmas garland when we started doing this attraction. So we bought black pine garland and heated it and twisted it and got it all weird. ... Now there's black garland everywhere — the craft stores have it. We'd like to think we started that trend. (Laughs). Because when two holidays collide, when we're Christmas and Halloween coming together, we don't have holly berry, we have pumpkin berry. The red is gone. Our skulls, our ornaments, anything creepy, we throw in there.

Q. What's the palette?

A. We are inspired by the film, we are not copying the film. The things in it — the snake, the maneating wreath — are actually in the film, and we use them in a different approach here. The palette is Halloween — black, orange, purple, green but vibrant, bright colors. The classic mansion is rather subdued, then we come in with Jack (Skellington) and our overlay and it is quite colorful. It's what Jack's idea of what Halloween and Christmas would be in Disneyland.

Q. What are the aesthetic guidelines you use? A. Asymmetricality is critical. Nothing is balanced. There are very few straight lines. Everything is crooked. For example, the striping on the ribbon is erratic — it's jiggedy-jaggedy. It's handmade-ish, because Jack supposedly made all this stuff. ... Main Street is normal, Haunted Mansion Holiday is abnormal.

Q. The flowers in the vases look dead, and it looks like you do a mix of faux and real arrangements outside. Why?

A. Everything has a dark, macabre twist to it. We're up for three months — October, November and December, so we have to use a tremendous amount of artificial foliage. But we buy stuff that looks dead already — the black garland, twisted branches and spider webs. That orange stuff that hangs from the garlands, that's amaranthus. It has that drippy, ghoulish look to it.

Q. What can you tell us about that Christmas list inside the house?

A. It's taken right out of the film, but we've augmented it. There is a naughty and nice list in the attic.

On the list is the production staff. Steven Davison is double naughty — he's the creative director. I'm naughty. I'll tell you a secret. My parents, my dog, my neighbors, friends, family, co-workers are on the list. It's one of the fun things we get to do as designers.

Q. What are your personal favorites among the decorations?

A. I come from theater. I've done a few productions of "Little Shop of Horrors," so what we call the snappy plants in the conservatory are kind of an homage to Audrey II, which is the big man-eating plant. But ours have different colors and they have poinsettia leaves coming from behind them so it's like Christmas Audrey II.

Use tape to add items to your pegboard wall

I LIKE to keep tools and supplies where I can see and reach them easily. My pegboard wall is full of these items, and I'm always looking for ways to hang even more stuff there. My favorite way to hang tubes of glue and other tubed items is by tape. Just cut off about an 8-inch piece of tape and fold it in half, securing both ends of the tape to the tube, leaving an inch or so of the folded end of the tape above the end of the tube. This creates a tab that you can punch a hole into, making it easy to hang on any spare hook on your pegboard wall.

frames from moving around. I haven't had to adjust any of the artwork since I did this. It's absolutely amazing! — H.D.

Q: My new dryer is larger than the old one. I have found that the drver sticks out a little past the doorway because the vent hose is behind it. I want to know if there is some way to work this out. Any ideas? — T.G.

A: Some dryers have an alternative access place on the side of the dryer so that it can be vented out the side instead of the back. There also is a specially designed vent that is flatter than the typical round vent material used on the back. Check your dryer and then check your hardware store or home center.

DEAR KELLY: My sister cleans houses for some extra cash. I learned a neat trick from her. She has a plastic tote with a handle on it that she carries with her around the house. It has a variety of cleaners. rags and sponges, detailing brushes and trash bags. She can go from room to room with this tote and get everything cleaned as she goes. She will go back and vacuum some areas but. since I've started doing this at home, my cleaning time is cut in half. I actually enjoy cleaning the house now — somewhat. — C.P.

If you've ever had to reach around a corner to loosen or tighten a screw, you could have used a flexible-shaft screwdriver. The Viper Driver has a 7-inch flexible extension stored in the handle that can be pulled out of the shaft. It can be locked into place so that it will turn as needed. but the extension is flexible while you use it. Check it out at www.mit-tool.com.

Cut expenses while husband is in college

DEAR DAVE: My husband will be leaving his full-time job in a year so that he can go back to school full time and finish his degree.

We've both agreed this is what we want to do, but it means that we'll go from a yearly income of $90,000 to $45,000.

We'll have tuition assistance from my job and his veteran's stipend to help pay for things, plus we're debt-free except for

But in this scenario, once we complete Baby Step 3 should we move directly to Baby Step 4 or continue saving? — Erin

Dear Erin: I think this is a good plan, as long as the two of you are on the same page and you're willing to save like crazy for the next year and beyond.

Even with help from your employer and his stipend, you'll still have some expenses, so you'll have to be ready.

Once you complete Baby Step 3, which is having three to six months of expenses set aside as an emergency fund, Baby Step 4 is usually starting to invest 15 percent of your income toward retirement.

In this case, while he's finishing his degree, you're not investing for retirement directly, but you are investing in your husband and your future together.

That's a great investment, by the way. As long as he's studying something that has marketplace application, you're setting the stage for him to make back the money put into his degree and much more.

If that's the plan, and he's not off pursuing a Ph.D. in something like German polka history, you two are making a great investment. So work hard now, cut all the corners you can and pile up money so you two can get through his time in school.

DEAR DAVE: How do you sell a vehicle with a lien amount that's higher than the actual value of the car? — Miranda

Dear Miranda: First, you have to find a way to cover the difference between the amount of the lien and what you can get for the car. Let's look at an example.

If the car is worth $15,000, and you owe $18,000, that would leave you $3,000 in the hole. How do you get out of that car?

The bank holds the title, and until you give them the payoff amount of $18,000, you're not getting the title.

The easiest and simplest way would be if you had $3,000 on hand to make up the dif-

But if someone comes along and buys the car from you for $15,000, you've got to be able to cover the remaining $3,000, right?

Barring the best-case scenario where you actually have the money, you could go to a local bank or credit union and borrow the remaining $3,000.

I hate debt, but being $3,000 in the hole is a lot better than $18,000 in the hole.

Then, you could turn around and pay back the

tal amount owed to the bank. They would give you the title, and you sign it over to the new owner. That's how it

Veterinary clinic expands

Hillcrest facility has 5 exam rooms and surgery space

BY AMANDA DEPROSPERO

The Dominion Post

Going from 4,200 square feet to 10,000 square feet is quite a change. But it's a needed one, Hillcrest Veterinary Clinic owner and veterinarian Dr. Kelley Owen said.

Recently, the clinic moved into its new home, right across the parking lot from its former space on Point Marion Road.

The location gives the three veterinarians and several techs and staff members extra room to treat the animals that To see video come to the and photos, clinic. go to ...

"A little more room back there for all of us to fit," Owen said smiling as she talked about the facility, which has five exam rooms, three treatment tables and a surgery facility.

TheDPost.com

"We started, probably three or four years ago, talking about expanding because we were needing a little bit more space, and we finally found a contractor and decided to move forward with it," Owen said.

Construction began July 2013. In August 2014, the new Hillcrest Veterinary Clinic was ready.

Owen has been practicing just off Point Marion Road since 1990. Her father, Eugene Owen, was also a veterinarian who practiced there, from 1961-'89. He died during Owen's last year of veterinary school. So she took over the family business.

"My father was a veterinarian originally. Of course, I worked in the hospital a lot and it became a passion for me," she said. "I'm inquisitive, so I like the diagnostics. I like a case work-up, and vou know it's always good when you can work something up and have it have an awesome outcome or prolong their life.'

With the new space, the three veterinarians, Owen, Dr. Aaron Pollock and Dr. Jess Anderson, will be able to do more of that diagnostic work, including endoscopy, digital X-rays and surgery.

"We really outgrew where we were at, and we were running into each other, and it was hard to practice the kind of medicine that we wanted to, so we've been super excited about this," Pollock said.

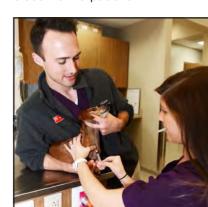

Pollock has worked alongside Owen since 2007. While he loves animals, he said it's also important to get along with the people in the veterinary business.

"It's rewarding to get to help something that can't speak for itself and figuring things out," he said. "Every day's a mystery. They can't tell us what's wrong and that's an exciting part about it."

That's the type of dedication to detail Linda Fischer loves about Hillcrest. Fischer has been bringing her pets to the clinic for more than 10 years. She has two corgis — a pembroke and a cardigan — that are cared for at the clinic. One dog has Addison's disease, which requires regular injections.

"He loves going there because they give him treats when they give him his injections," Fischer said. "All the techs are wonderful. They make you feel welcome.

"[Owen] really, really cares about the animals, and she's always done very, very well," she added, noting that when one of her pets had to have a blood transfusion, Owen stayed all night with him at the clinic. One of the most important HILLCREST VETERINARY CLINIC

aspects of the clinic, though, is working with the Monongalia County Canine Adoption Center and Animal Friends of North Central West Virginia, Owen said, to take in dogs and cats that need help and homes.

"We like to do our rescue. That's one of my passions is to get puppies, kittens, adult dogs, geriatric dogs and cats into homes," she said. "And then we do their preventative care and then hopefully get them to their forever homes."

Having an updated space to care for all the animals that come through the doors at Hillcrest is important to that success, Pollock said.

"We've all got pets of our own," Pollock said. "We know what it's like, and because we've got a bigger, nicer building doesn't mean that we don't still have a small-town type of an atmosphere and bed-side manner about us."

Corporate America enters a record spin cycle

CORPORATE EXECUTIVES have always liked fads, and right now they are keen on spinning.

Their spinning is done with corporate assets. Big companies from Energizer to eBay have decided to break themselves up by handing out shares in a subsidiary, and it's happening at a record pace.

Edge Consulting Group, which publishes the Spinoff Report, counts 44 breakups this year involving companies worth at least $500 million, and says that surpasses the 2007 record of 43. Spinoffs scheduled for next year already number 23.

Bloomberg, which includes smaller deals, tallies 166 spinoff announcements this year. Many, including eBay's spinoff of Pay-Pal, reverse earlier acquisitions.

Dan Elfenbein, associate professor of organization and strategy at Washington University's Olin School of Business, said spinoffs surge during bull markets. "A CEO never wants to split up a company in a way that doesn't yield nice valuations for both," he said.

Breakups sometimes are forced by activist shareholders such as Carl Icahn, who pressed eBay to jettison PayPal. They also can result when an older, slowgrowing unit is obscuring the value of faster-growing businesses.

Energizer, for example, wants to separate the slowgrowth battery business from its personal-care products. At Hewlett Packard, the low-margin PC and printer business gets in the way of a sexier technology-services unit.

If some spinoffs undo mergers, others sow the seeds of combinations. Ryan Mendy, chief operating officer of Edge Consulting, said about two of every 10 spunoff companies get acquired within two years.

Examples include both parts of the old Sara Lee, which was broken up two years ago. Sara Lee's meat business, Hillshire Farms, was bought by Tyson Foods, and its tea and coffee business, D.E. Master Blenders, was taken private by a German company.

Analysts speculated that the current spinoff crop might produce many takeover candidates. Google is mentioned as a possible buyer for PayPal, and Energizer's personal care unit is said to be attractive to larger rivals such as Unilever or Colgate-Palmolive.

If a buyer is ready, though, why not just sell your subsidiary rather than spinning it off?

Perhaps those buyers aren't willing to pay what management thinks the business is worth until they see the subsidiary publishing its own financial results. "I can imagine that it's more difficult to prepare a unit for sale inside a larger organization," Elfenbein said. "Management incentives are one thing to look at." Bingo, Mendy said. Shares of a spun-off company are simply handed to the parent company's stockholders.

Many stockholders must dump the shares; an index fund, for example, can't hold shares of a new company that's not in its index. This creates an opportunity for managers, who typically get stock options soon after a spinoff, to make money.

"Management are incentivized not to do a road show ahead of the breakup, as they would do ahead of an IPO" to promote the stock, Mendy said. "They want their options priced as low as possible."

Since 2000, Mendy said, broken-up companies generate eight times the return of the S&P 500 index in the first year after a split. The spun-off company outperforms its old parent by an average of 50 percent.

You can believe executives who say they have a strategic reason to break up what their predecessors put together. You can also bet that they have dollar signs in their eyes when they're saying it.

Build goal consensus for success

Q: I'm heading a company task force to introduce some wellness programs. My concern is that people will pursue their special interests instead of looking at our overall needs, and also that it'll be hard to meet the needs of people at our satellite office. We're not a huge company and resources are limited. Any suggestions?

A: Avoid drama and build consensus around the goals instead of the tools.

The inner game

Leading this type of initiative can be the classic "herding cats" situation, with all of the frustration that can come with it. If you have a high level of control needs, this can add to the challenge. So start by taking some time, relax about the situation and take some deep breaths. Remind yourself that a satisfactory outcome is achievable and trust the process.

To set up yourself — and your company — for success, think about similar processes in which you've been involved. What has worked and, just as important, what has been less successful in terms of process? Consider examples of leaders who have been able to work with committees to achieve their goals, and analyze the strategies and tactics they've used. You may be able to learn a great deal from their examples.

It seems like you have misgivings about the motivations of some of your team members. If you have concrete reasons for your concerns, articulate them and consider how realistic they are. You'll be better able to manage this if you're clear about what you think is going on.

Be sure vou understand your company's vision, motivation, willingness to invest and the extent to which leadership has your back. Do some homework on resources that may be available internally and externally, too.

The outer game

Get ready to work with your group by having a chat with each of the members to learn more about their points of view. This will also give you a chance to ensure there is a good diversity of needs represented, reflecting different health-status levels, ages, family compositions and values — and make sure you have a member from your satellite office. If needed, tweak your team membership to get the representation you need.

Spend some time agreeing on ground rules, roles and responsibilities, and decision criteria. You may find that full consensus is not the best strategy for getting a plan through. However, you all need to buy into the goal you're trying to achieve. And it needs to be specific. Rather than "set up a wellness program," tie it to the company motivation: "Develop a program that will help people manage their health to keep health care costs under control."

When identifying and vetting possible approaches. vou can manage special interests by running the idea against the goal. It'll provide a less subjective (hence, less emotional) test of whether someone's pet project is a fit.

Trucking firms are stretching to find more drivers

BY DEE DEPASS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis) (MCT)

On a recent Thursday afternoon, Tim Hoag stood in the arrivals area at Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport, looking for a truck driver.

The man he was waiting for, Bill McMahon, had driven trucks for Hoag's company, Copeland Trucking of Fridley, and Hoag made a deal to lure him back.

Because McMahon now lives in California, Hoag agreed to let him drive out there once a month, even though Copeland avoids jobs in California because of the state's burdensome regulations. But finding drivers is so difficult these days that Hoag was willing accommodate McMahon's desire for regular visits home.

'It will be worth it just to have him available here in the Midwest for those three weeks of every month," Hoag said. "That is what you have to do in today's environment."

McMahon is thrilled. "I think it's awesome. They are going to take care of me and I am going to take care of them," he said. "That's what we agreed on. That's why I'm here."

Across the country, trucking companies, and manufacturers and retailers with their own fleets, are resorting to an array of incentives, including higher wages, to attract drivers.

Wal-Mart Stores Inc., the nation's biggest retailer and operator of one of its biggest truck fleets, is using radio ads to appeal to qualified truck drivers with an offer of a $76,000 salary plus benefits to join that the country has the company.

That's far above the national average trucker pay of about $50,000.

Wal-Mart has 7,200 truck drivers but needs more, spokesman Brian Nick said.

"There is definitely a shortage in the company ... and an overall shortage in the industry," Nick said. "We are anxious to get more folks applications so we can pursue more hiring."

The American Trucking Associations reports

750,000 "for hire" drivers but needs at least 30,000 more at the moment.

It estimates the indusmust 100,000 drivers every year for 10 years if it hopes to keep up with retirements, turnover and industry growth.

Hoag estimates he turns down 10 hauling requests from potential customers every day. He's looking to add eight drivers to the 56 who now work for the firm.

Founder: Whole Foods can't sit still

BY CLAUDIA GRISALES

Austin American-Statesman (MCT)

These are interesting times for Whole Foods Market.

Long the national leader in the natural and organic foods industry — and long a darling of investors, thanks to its consistent earnings performance — the Austin, Texas-based grocer has in recent months found itself on the defensive.

After a series of disappointing earnings reports - and amid growing competition for natural foods customers — Whole Foods is making some changes to how it operates. The company recently unveiled an aggressive price cuts program at its five Austin-area stores, the latest in a series of counterattacks against its competitors. The company also recently launched a national grocery delivery and pickup service, and started its first-ever rewards program, in Princeton, N.J., with plans to expand the program to other stores.

There's plenty at stake for the Austin-based organic foods giant, which has 2,800 employees locally and 85,000 workers at 399 stores worldwide. Co-CEO and co-founder John Mackey sat down at Whole Foods' Austin headquarters to talk with the Austin American-Statesman about the company's battle plan going forward.

Q: What's ahead for Whole Foods?

A: The essence of it is that for the longest time, Whole Foods Market was very differentiated from all of our competitors. If you wanted to get organic produce, you came to Whole Foods co-CEO and co-founder John Mackey.

Whole Foods. If you wanted natural foods, you came to Whole Foods. Local foods, Whole Foods. And I think due to our tremendous success, we just have a lot of imitators. This is really how capitalism works. You innovate, you create something new, it works, then people copy it and try to make it better, or try to make it cheaper. That's how progress occurs in our society.

For a while last year, Whole Foods was the most valuable, dedicated food retailer in the United States from a market capitalization standpoint. We were actually valued higher than Kroger. I think that's a huge wake-up call for the conventional supermarket industry and they have just been far more aggressive. I always like to joke that for about the first 20 years of our existence, we just kind of flew under the radar. Nobody paid attention to us. We were just these weird people selling weird food. What happened was that it's really penetrated now into the mainstream, so everybody and their cousin is selling a lot of foods that are similar to Whole Foods. We still think we're differentiated, we think we have superior quality in pretty much all of the important categories, but it's not always quite as apparent to our customer as it used to be. So we've been working very hard.

Q: In your July 30 earnings conference call, the company discussed a five-part strategy, including plans to refresh 70 percent of your older stores. What does refreshing your stores look like?

A: It's not exactly a remodel, which oftentimes involves expansion and huge changes. So refresh means that for Whole Foods, we are going to change the signage, we are going to change some of the messaging, we are going to paint the store in some cases. We are very decentralized, so we do a lot of experimentation, a lot of innovations occur everywhere and then these successful experiments get studied and they get copied. So refresh will involve a lot more successful innovations ... put into the stores around the country. So in this (Austin) case, we are refreshing the prices.

Q: What kind of competition is Whole Foods facing in its hometown and elsewhere?

A: All you have to do is look out the window to see Austin just booming, it's growing so fast and (there's been a) significant increase in competition in the Austin food market. It used to be H-E-B and Central Market and Randalls. Now, you've got Trader Joes, Sprouts ana Central Markets continue to grow. It's a matter of time before (more) come in. We used to just have local, regional competitors and now we've got more national competitors in this marketplace. And of course we never want to overlook Wal-Mart, Costco or any of those guys. So we have to be more competitive.

ask for raises. Appropriately chastised, he apologized and national attention moved on. But for many workers men and women — asking for a raise remains the sticky wicket. Making the request is tough for any worker who has realistic understanding of the economy and the employers' finances.

In a time of generally stagnant wages and continued fears of job loss, few employees dare to make rash demands. Yet many honestly deserve more pay. Here's how to request it:

Time the appeal correctly. Know when your workplace's budgets are drawn up for next year and put your bid in a couple of months before they're inked. Alternatively, time your request to align with when you've assumed more duties or received a promotion that was offered in name only. Know the market. You must be realistic in your request. What is the pay range for people who do your job — both inside and outside your company? Consider regional price differences. Use online resources such as pay.com and personal conversations to get the information.

Prepare your reasoning. Be ready to cite specifics about why you deserve a raise. Don't rely on "just because I haven't had one in a long time." Make a list of examples showing how you've exceeded expectations, taken on more responsibility, done things that made or saved your employer money.

Be calm. Approach the appropriate manager at a time when both of you have time to talk privately and at some length. Avoid yelling, crying or other strong emotion. Just state the facts.

Accept the outcome. Sometimes you simply won't win. If you can't accept the rejection, start a quiet job search. If you can wait until later to ask again, try to focus on keeping your morale up in the meantime.

For some, battle against breast cancer is personal

BALANCING ACT

BY CINDY KRISCHER GOODMAN

The Miami Herald (MCT)

Across the nation this month, businesses are rallying their employees and customers in the fight against breast cancer. For some owners, the cause is personal and workplace participation is that much more rewarding.

On a recent Monday morning, Scott Collins sat beside his wife, Lori, as she endured another round of chemotherapy to treat her breast cancer. He should have been out at a job site, supervising his team of window cleaners, but he knew they understood the competing demands on his time.

Throughout October, Collins' employees are wearing pink shirts in support of National Breast Cancer Awareness Month. At the end of the month, Affordable Window Cleaning Co. in Davie, Fla., will donate a percentage of its profits to The Gift of Hope, a foundation that helps local breast cancer patients with financial needs.

"I want to support my wife in every way I can," Scott said. "My crew understands that.'

Some owners, such as Scott Collins, start small, asking employees to wear pink clothing or ribbons and to get involved in fundraisers. Others, such as Rocco Mangel, of Rocco's Tacos, rally tomers in a bigger way. Mangel raised $32,000 in 2013 from an October promotion in which a portion of Tuesday night proceeds at all five restaurants went to the Susan G. Komen Foundation. (Rocco's girlfriend's mother is fighting her second battle with the disease.)

The efforts of both represent more than just fundraisers or awareness events. For spouses and family members of breast cancer patients, these are a way to ease heartache or show solidarity. Some smallbusiness owners gain emotional support from signing up employees for local Race for the Cure teams.

Some take other approaches. Oscar Padilla said his mother died of breast cancer. The memories of her rapid decline still sting, he said, "Anvthing I can do to spread awareness is gratifying."

Every October, Padilla turns his Kairos Hair Salon pink and donates 10 percent of sales from services and products to the Komen Foundation. This week, his 10 stylists will participate in a cut-a-thon with raffle prizes donated by neighboring vendors.

Breast cancer remains the leading cancer killer among women ages 20 to 59; more than 1.4 million cases are diagnosed annually worldwide. It is a lifechanging event with repercussions that extend beyond the disease and treatment, and affect those who act as a support system.

A: If you stop speaking to Joanne, you will simply be countering one juvenile behavior with another. So instead of getting all sulky and passive-aggressive, you need to come up with a more adult strategy. As a first step, take a moment to consider your recent interaction more objectively.

After an argument, people usually describe their own behavior as calm and reasonable, while portraying their opponent as angry or immature. # SUNDAY, OCT. 26, 2014 THE DOMINION POST 8-G Campion Dus Life Cam

JIH grants WVU $10.7 million for stroke research

Submitted to The Dominion Post

With the help of a major federal grant, WVU is bolstering its faculty and scientific research on stroke to mitigate the devastating effects of the disease across the state and the nation.

The grant of $10.7 million over the next five years, including more than $2.1 million this year, will have a transformational effect on basic and translational stroke research at WVU. The funding will enhance mentoring and development of five junior investigators and their research programs, as well as support core resources.

The American Heart Association ranks stroke as the fourth highest killer in the nation and one of the leading causes of longterm disability. The burden of stroke is particularly heavy in West Virginia, with the state having one of the highest incidence rates in the country.

"Risk factors of stroke and stroke itself affect a lot of people — with particular prevalence in Appalachian populations. These populations are seeing stroke events occur at younger ages and with longer-lasting effects," Jim Simpkins, director of the WVU Center for Basic and Translational Stroke Research (CBTSR) and Medicine Department of Physiology and Pharmacology, said.

'We are being presented with an opportunity to make a significant impact on the quality of life for stroke patients. The discoveries that our faculty make about when and how these events happen can minimize poor outcomes from stroke and help patients recover quickly so they can return to their families and live normal lives."

COBRE, which stands for Centers for Biomedical Research Excellence, is a program of the National Institute for General Medical Sciences focused professor in the WVU School of on enhancing research and mentoring of young faculty members. This is the third COBRE grant awarded at WVU.

> "It's no secret that stroke is a major problem in West Virginia," Glen H. Dillon, vice president for Health Sciences Research and Graduate Education, said. "Receipt of this competitively earned NIH grant will ensure WVU continues to be a leader in conducting cutting-edge research focused on stroke."

Simpkins explained that the West Virginia Stroke COBRE will support a key part of CBTSR. WVU is unique because it has the capability to address bench (laboratory research), bedside (clinical research), and community (outreach) issues in stroke.

"We must engage a lot of people in order to solve West Virginia's stroke issue," Simpkins said. "Stroke prediction, cause, prevention, acute treatment, and rehabilitation are all linked, and a national center for excellence in stroke research will provide the most advanced research into all of these areas."

The grant will support a formal junior investigator mentoring program, which Simpkins said is critical to faculty development and research independence.

Soils team qualifies for nationals

Submitted to The Dominion Post

A second-place finish in regional competition has qualified the WVU Soils Team for the National Collegiate Soils Contest next spring.

Ten students from WVU's Davis College of Agriculture, Natural Resources and Design traveled to Clemson, S.C., Oct. 6-9, to compete in the 2014 Southeast Regional Collegiate Soils Contest. WVU's team members were among 71 students representing 11 schools.

"After three days of practice, the team was prepared for the unfamiliar soils and the students were able to calibrate their judging skills to the local conditions, said James Thompson, a professor of soils and land use in the Davis College and the team's coach.

The students who traveled with the team were David Ackley, a junior in agribusiness management and rural development from Edon, Ohio; Ellie Bell, a senior in soil science from Snowshoe; Riley Biddle, a junior in agronomy from Carmichaels, Pa.; Caleb Griffin, a senior in agroecology from Friendsville, Md.; Jimmy Leonard, a sophomore in agroecology from Middletown; Emily Lessman, a sophomore in soil science from Mount Pleasant, Pa.; Adrienne Nottingham, a senior in soil science from Green Bank; Katie Stegemerten, a senior in multidisciplinary studies from Annapolis, Md.; Becca Swope, a senior in agricultural and extension education from Salem, Ohio; and Emily Wells, a senior in agribusiness management and rural development from Sistersville.

When the results were tallied, six WVU students placed in the top 25. Nottingham finished second, Griffin seventh, Swope 11th, Stegemerten 12th, Lessman 21st and Bell 23rd.

Livestock team scores at regionals

Submitted to The Dominion Post

A team of WVU students brought their knowledge of livestock to a regional tournament and came back with a second-place finish. WVU's Livestock Judging Team traveled to Harrisburg, Pa., on Oct. 4, for the Keystone International Livestock Expo. The WVU team finished second overall, won second place in both sheep and swine, and third place in cattle and reasons.

Robby Currey, an agricultural and extension education major from Salem, was second place individual overall, first in sheep, second in reasons and fourth in cattle. Shawna Rhodes, an animal and nutritional sciences major from Statts Mills, was eighth place individual overall, second in sheep and third in swine. Amanda Kline, an animal and nutritional sciences major from Sabillasville, Md., was 10th place individual overall and fourth in swine.

WVU's team competed against students from Ohio State University, the University of Missouri, Clemson, the University of Florida, the University of Tennessee, Penn State, North Carolina State and Delaware Valley College.

They are coached by Scott Bowdridge, assistant professor of animal science in the Davis College of Agriculture, Natural Resources and Design, and Taylor Harrison, a graduate student pursuing a degree in beef nutrition.

Respectful Mountaineers

Social media response

WVU marketing students Deonna Gandy and Chris Hickey have been putting their lessons in a classroom to work this past week.

After the destructive behavior that occurred throughout Morgantown by some students and visitors following the Oct. 18 victory against then-fourthranked Baylor, the pair who met freshmen year while living in Honors Hall wanted to help.

So they took to social media, where much of the damage to the university's reputation had been done. Photos and videos from the disappointing events Saturday night had been surfacing and Morgantown had been trending for hours for all the wrong reasons.

Hickey, a junior born and raised in Wilmington, Del., sent a Facebook message to Gandy, a junior from Pittsburgh, asking, What can we do?"

"WVU educates students to be successful for the workforce, and we need to be a great representation of that," Gandy said. "The behavior that night is not who we are or what we want to be known for."

The answer they come up with was a student-led social media awareness campaign, which they thought could showveloped the #RespectfulMoun- are fed up." taineer hashtag.

Hickey was the first person to use the hashtag on Twitter. At 4:23 p.m. Oct. 19, he tweeted, "My name is Chris Hickey and I'm a #RespectfulMountaineer. I love and respect this University and the town in which it resides."

He and Gandy could not anticipate what would happen next. The hashtag exploded. While it didn't trend nationally the way Morgantown did on Saturday night, it hit home with many students, faculty, staff, alumni and fans across the world.

"While some students behaved inappropriately on Saturday night, many of us were so upset with how our second home was treated," Hickey said. "We love this town, and the success we've had for this campaign shows that a lot of other students, as well as alumni and residents, feel that way, too."

Within the first few days, the #RespectfulMountaineer hashtag had been used more than 1,500 times and had reached more than 500,000 people and 1.4 million timelines.

"It just clicked," Gandy said. "We want it to be about the celebration, not the devastation. ... I know this is a move-case those who love WVU and ment that will have a lasting Morgantown. To do so, they de-impact, because many students

> The completely student-led initiative has university officials talking, including President Gordon Gee, who mentioned the #RespectfulMountaineer hashtag in his letter to the WVU community on Monday. He even joined in on Twitter by saying, "I am a #RespectfulMountaineer, because I know this state, its people and our institution can and will rise to their highest potential."

> "Deonna and Chris have clearly hit on a great idea that has resonated with Mountaineers all over," Corey Farris, WVU dean of students, said. "They will help change the culture. Their powerful message will take their university back.'

> Morgantown City Council also applauded the social media campaign at Tuesday's meeting, calling it "heartening" to see what students are doing to be part of the solution to the culture change.

> The WVU community can join the effort by using #RespectfulMountaineer Facebook and Twitter, and following the new Twitter account @RespectfulWVU, which was created Tuesday evening. To get involved, email respectful mountaineer@gmail.com.

WVU joins $4.89M effort to fight obesity

Submitted to The Dominion Post

WVU will help teens "Get Fruved" with the support of a $4.89 million grant from the US-DA's National Institute of Food and Agriculture (NIFA).

The project, will implement a peer-led, train-the-trainer social marketing intervention to encourage teens to eat more fruits and vegetables to help prevent chronic disease including obesity in older adolescents and young adults.

Melissa Olfert, assistant professor of human nutrition and foods in WVU's Davis College of Agriculture, Natural Resources and Design, will lead the Mountaineer efforts on the project in coordination with seven other state partners.

"The goal of our research is to develop a novel strategy to promote healthy behaviors associated with weight awareness in older adolescent populations," Olfert said. To reach this goal, a community-based participatory research approach will be used with partnerships among teens and young adults, graduate students, university researchers and faculty, along with members of WVU's Collegiate 4-H chapter.

Additionally, the program will partner with campus student groups, not only those focusing on majors related to nutrition and health, but also such diverse areas as business, media, and the performing arts. Activities, campus events, and even art and campaign logos will all be developed and implemented by students.

"The peer-led, train-the-trainer intervention is an interactive, non-traditional social marketing, online media, and environmental change approach seeking to promote healthy behavior with communities of college and high school students," Olfert said.

Specific health behaviors targeted include increasing intakes of fruits and vegetables, decreasing foods high in saturated fats and added sugars, managing stress, getting adequate sleep and increasing physical activity.

"Although these healthy behaviors are often targeted in other interventions, this project is unique in that it increases participant engagement through creative interactions, participant-created content and incorporation of age-appropriate technology," Olfert said. "It also incorporates social environments and peer-led strategies while simultaneously addressing changes in environments."

Physics researcher reacts to nuclear fusion news

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Aerospace company Lockheed Martin recently announced that it was one step closer to producing nuclear fusion energy, an industry in development for decades that is expected to bring cheaper, cleaner and sustainable energy to the world. Earl Scime, the Oleg D. Jefimenko Professor of Physics at WVU, decided as a boy that he wanted to go into physics and his specialty of plasma physics to develop this bountiful clean energy.

He agrees with the scientists quoted in a variety of news publications from Forbes to The Huffington Post that the company hasn't offered specific details to evaluate the strength of their progress.

"I've seen absolutely no details other than a schematic that looks vaguely like a conventional magnetic mirror, a fusion concept that has been around for quite some time," Scime said.

The company's marketing video purports Lockheed intends to create a compact reactor that. because of its size, would be produced sooner than otherwise anticipated.

"It will be interesting to see what they come up with," he said of Lockheed's research.

Scime, one of four faculty members in the plasma physics group at WVU (the university is hiring a fifth), said Lockheed is one of about a half dozen companies that have secured venture capital to research the various problems that need to be overcome to produce nuclear fusion, in addition to research institutes and universities studying the problem.

Nuclear fusion energy is different from current nuclear fission power plants in that the fusion process wouldn't rely on materials such as uranium, which produces highly radioactive waste and has led to releases of radioactively contaminated air and water, such as the Fukushima accident that resulted from an earthquake-induced, 180-foot high tsunami in 2011.

Nuclear fusion would instead rely on fuel such as heavy hydrogen (deuterium) to create a controlled release of energy to use in a power grid. That goal has eluded scientists for more than 60 years.

Previously, large scale reporting of the quest for nuclear fusion had a negative impact on funding when media outlets in the late 1980s reported the failure of "cold fusion," a nuclear reaction expected to take place at room temperature, which Scime said was a fraud.

"Funding has been very tight, and there have been no new fusion projects in the U.S." in recent years, he said.

Fusion research started at WVU 28 years ago with the hiring of Mark Koepke, who is now the chairman of the national Fusion Energy Sciences Advisory Committee through the Department of Energy. About eight years after that, Scime was hired. Now, Paul Cassak and Felix Julian Schulze have joined them.

Chevrolet Silverado 2500 HD is massive, speedy

AUTO REVIEW

BY TERRY BOX

The Dallas Morning News (MCT)

Anything roughly as big as a Motel 6 can quickly become an expressway smasher.

Here, let me get some truckdriving tunes on ... oops. Was that little jolt a Mini Cooper or a Volkswagen Beetle?

Hard to tell from up here.

At 6-foot-6 and 7,000 pounds, the 2015 Chevrolet Silverado heavy-duty pickup trails long shadows, blocking out the lateafternoon sun.

You don't climb into the massive, diesel-powered truck. You inch up a metal cliff to clamber into the cab, hoping you don't slip and slide back down.

Once I got the Silverado 2500 HD docked at Chateau Box in Richardson, though, I always enjoyed the early-evening twinkle of downtown Fort Worth.

But in case you hadn't noticed, big heavy-duty pickups — the ones with enough steel in their frames for a credible bomb shelter — have grown truly huge.

They are longer, taller, slightly wider and probably 1,000 pounds heavier than the largest pickups 15 years ago — and they absolutely mortify Prius drivers.

2015 Chevrolet Silverado 2500 HD.

Moreover, they won't fit in most private garages or many public garages downtown, are way too long for parking spaces and can barely negotiate driveways.

But they also ride and drive better, consume slightly less fuel, haul far more weight and offer vastly more amenities than those old sledgehammers we bashed around in the '90s. (How about a Bose stereo system and heated and cooled seats?)

Granted, the restyled '15 Silverado HD looks a lot like the previous-generation truck, a common approach in the conservative full-size pickup segment. But I thought the one I had recently really bristled with new toughness in a low-key sort of way.

How it runs

Before you blast off in the truck, you may need to lower the window to make sure the Max is spinning.

Like so many modern diesels, the engine emits a slight clatter when it's cold but quickly settles into a pleasant, somewhat muted growl.

Give it the boot — a hard push is needed — and this giant mass of metal rises up some and bolts down the road, feeling a bit like a house caught in a mudslide.

In fact, it will bear-sprint to 60 in a very fleet 7.6 seconds, according to Car and Driver, which is quick enough to dust many midsize sedans.

At any speed under 80, the truck responds to jabs of the throttle with a pleasant, torquey surge.

In addition, the Allison transmission did a good job of keeping the Duramax mostly between 2,000 and 4,000 rpm, where life felt good.

Heavy-duty pickups remain exempt from economy standards, so who knows how much the Silverado guzzles?

But I figure it probably returns 15 to 17 miles per gallon on the highway — or a couple of miles per gallon better than my car, which weighs half as much.

It can also tow 13,000 pounds, a max that should easily cover one of those party boats filled with fine tans and frequent misdemeanors.

Oddly, for such a large structure, er, truck, the Silverado steered and stopped nicely.

As you might expect, the massive Silverado simply hated corners — even equipped with stability control.

It takes a village to raise a child, or garden

My green thumb came only as a result of the mistakes I made while learning to see things from the plant's point of view.

GARDENING OFFERS multisensory, firsthand learning opportunities in a wide variety of disciplines, including the natural and social sciences, math, language arts and nutrition. Due to weak academic scores in science and math skills among American children, the need for innovation in science and math teaching is paramount. There is increasing evidence that students who participate in school gardening score significantly higher on standardized science achievement tests (Klemmer et al., 2005).

Within the past 10 years, there has been amazing growth in the number of school gardens nationwide. This growth seems to be due to various research findings that identify educational benefits for students involved in the process of maintain-

■ Connection with nature: A close relationship with nature can be therapeutic in addressing various diagnoses and other children today. When children recognize the direct effect they have on their environment, they can find purpose in their behaviors and insight into what healthy nurturing can to do to living things. This insight can be translated into their view of their home environments and support self-control.

■ Promotion of environmental responsibility: When children study about water and energy cycles, the food chain and the peculiar needs of individual species, and when they feel a sense of connection to a certain species or individual plant, they have a reason to care about all the forces that impact that plant's future. A garden offers many occasions for achieving insight into the long-term human impact on the natural environment — which reminds me of what I learned in Scouts: Leave no trace.

■ Improved life-script and nutrition: With West Virginia obesity rates ranked number one again, school gardening offers children opportunities for outdoor exercise while teaching them a useful skill. Gardens with fruits and vegetables can also help revise attitudes about particular foods. Students are more likely to try eating vegetables they have grown themselves and to ask for them at home (Morris & Zidenberg-Cherr, 2002). When students take their newly found preferences back to their families, they can help improve family consumption choices.

■ Multisensory learning and student engagement: Gardening activities can help engage students in learning in ways that are more difficult to achieve in the classroom. Several studies show that many students don't learn well in the traditional lecture-regurgitation style Gardening allows surprises, not disruptions, to arise when insects land in the vicinity, when plants are afflicted with mites or fungus, or when the weather surprises everyone and disrupts the plan for the day,

The opportunities that school gardens offer our students and community provide a chance to be a part of something great. The greatness comes from embracing Appalachian traditions of using the land. respecting the land and learning from what Mother Nature has provided.

Ford goes zero-emissions with a Pedego electric bike

BY CHARLES FLEMING

Los Angeles Times (MCT)

Ford Motor Co., as part of its commitment to putting more lower-emission vehicles on the road, has done a deal with California-based electric bicycle company Pedego.

The result: A Fordbranded beach cruiser powered by an electric battery that buys the rider up to 20 miles of pedal-free operation or longer, if the rider pedals part of the time.

The original impulse, the auto company said, came from Executive Chairman Bill Ford, who encouraged the company to reimagine the future of transportation.

Two years ago, a Ford representative approached Pedego and asked the company to build a bike.

Pedego Electric Bikes got its start in 2006, when co-founder Don Di-Costanzo bought an electric bike so he wouldn't have to pedal uphill on his way back from the beach. He didn't like the bike he bought, so he built his own.

formed Pedego company in 2009 with his former college roommate Terry Sherry. Operating from a single shop, Pedego eventually became the largest electric bike retailer in the U.S.

Eight years later, Pedego has sold more than 20,000 electric bikes, about 80 percent of them in the U.S., and about half of those in California.

The plug-in electric bikes retail for $2,000 to

The 2015 Lamborghini Huracan.

Lamborghini Huracan: Music to a driver's ear

BY SUSAN CARPENTER

The Orange County Register (MCT)

With an exterior color named for the myth of Icarus, I should've known. Drive the Lamborghini Huracán too slowly, and it begs the question: Why even bother?

But take it up on its sporting specs, and you might end up like I did: Trailed by the police and chastised.

"You're making a lot of noise, ma'am," was the specific complaint from the officers who pulled me over and, having failed to display any sense of humor or curiosity whatsoever about a hot-off-the-presses supercar that had been swiveling heads everywhere else I'd driven, at least didn't write me a ticket.

Noise is so subjective. Barking dogs, helicopters those are the sounds that get under my skin, but the siren song of the Huracán LP 610-4? Pure that's brought to life as easily as pushing a button on the stereo. Specifically, it's enacted through the steering wheel in any drive mode other than its Strada, or street, default, which vields a steady thrum. But Sport and Corsa release its full strength, rev matching and crackling with each downshift, making it grade-A police bait.

Italian exotic An named for a Spanish fighting bull, the Huracán is the successor to Lamborghini's best-selling car of all time, the Gallardo, which has now been put out to pasture. Lamborghini started making the rounds with its "entry-level" $240,745 how-low-canyou-go coupe in January through private events at racetracks and, appropriately, art galleries. The Huracán has since become the most successful new car in Lamborghini's 51-year history. As it begins to roll into dealerships this month, Lamborghini reports more than 3,000 have been prefor five days, it's easy to understand the enthusiasm. Not only are its angular lines unmistakably Lambo and phenomenally sexy, its power is almost as quick as its main competitor - the wild child Ferrari 458 Speciale. Powered with a brand-new portand direct-injected naturally aspirated mid-rearmounted V10, it accelerates from 0 to 60 mph in a lickety-split 3.1 seconds, when properly spooled with its launch feature. Lacking access to a track, and having had my allotted encounter with the police two days into my loan, I didn't personally attempt to check this particular specification as I wheeled it through my usuexotic stomping grounds. But I will say this: It took very little pedal effort to join L.A.'s occasionally race-like traffic.

In automatic mode, the dual-clutch Huracán's 7-speed is so incredibly smooth and quick shifting, I didn't even feel it move from gear to gear. I heard it — and verified it Flushing brake fluid suggested after 20K miles

MOTORING Q&A

BY PAUL BRAND

Star Tribune (Minneapolis) (MCT)

Q: Is it necessary to flush the brake fluid after 20,000 miles, as my Mercedes dealer recommends?

A: I recommend this routine service for every motor vehicle. Historically, domestic carmakers haven't listed this as routine service for their vehicles, but it has been, and continues to be, a recommended service for most European and performance cars. In fact, race cars are prepared for every race with fresh brake fluid.

Why? Moisture. draulic brake fluid is a glycol ether-based fluid that is hydroscopic, meaning it has an affinity for attracting water. Even the smallest amount of moisture contamination in brake fluid can significantly reduce its boiling point.

This is critical because the characteristic of brake fluid that makes it appropriate for use in hydraulic systems is its incompressibility. There is no loss of force transmitted from the brake pedal through the master cylinder to the caliper or wheel cylinder. When fluid is contaminated with moisture, temperatures reached in the caliper or wheel cylinder can boil the moisture, generating gas bubbles in the fluid which are, of course, compressible. The symptom of this is a soft, somewhat unpredictable brake pedal not particularly confidencebuilding when trying to stop the vehicle.

Since some percentage of moisture absorption is normal over time, a periodic flushing and bleeding of the hydraulic system to replace any contaminated brake fluid is a very good maintenance practice. In addition,

Ford profit falls in third quarter on truck costs

DEARBORN, Mich. — Ford's new aluminum-sided F-150 will be a lot lighter and more efficient when it goes on sale this year. But for now it's a serious drag on profits.

Net income dropped 34 percent to $835 million in the third quarter, largely due to the cost of launching the pickup. The new F-150, which is 700 pounds lighter due to its aluminum construction, is scheduled to go on sale by the end of this year.

Ford repeatedly warned investors that this year would be difficult financially. It's launching a record 23 vehicles worldwide, including the F-150 and the new Mustang sports car that went on sale during the third quarter. It's also building five plants in Asia and launching the luxury Lincoln brand in China.

Yet, investors keep showing signs of nervousness over the pickup truck gamble. After hitting a high of $17.84, in July, Ford's shares have steadily declined. After the earnings report, the shares were down 4.3 percent to $13.77 in midday trading.

The F-Series has been the best-selling vehicle in the U.S. for 30 years: Changing its body from steel to aluminum could be a gamechanger for the industry, but it could also hurt Ford's reputation — and profits if the new material causes quality problems or doesn't meet buyers' expectations. Morgan Stanley analyst Adam Jonas estimates the

'Forever' and a day

New fantasy drama toys with the immortal

By Lydia Peever

ow would you explain to your friends and coworkers that you may live forever? Imagine bumping into your college professor decades after graduation looking much the same as the first day you met. How would you explain that away? The fledgling series "Forever" tackles this idea when a new episode of the fantasy drama airs Tuesday, Oct. 28, on ABC.

Enter Dr. Henry Morgan. Aside from being touted as the top medical examiner in New York City, he makes a hobby of playing with dead things. Rest assured, this is all in the name of research as Morgan is immortal. He dies time and time again — four times in the premiere, if you can swallow that — and keeps coming back. The problem is that even though he has studied death, he has no idea why it eludes him.

The dark doctor is played by loan Gruffudd ("Ringer"), who has his fair share of dark and brooding in roles on his resumé. You may recall him as Mr. Fantastic from the Marvel Comics-based "Fantastic Four" franchise, where he may have been just as conflicted dealing with a preternatural power few could understand. He also has starred in films such as the biographical drama "W." (2008), "King ing Grace" (2006).

"I'm a character that has lived for 200 years," Gruffudd said in conversation with ABC News. "Yes,
I'm immortal,
but

Arthur" (2004) and "Amaz-

[Dr. Morgan] sees this as a curse rather than a blessing. If you can imagine living for 200 years and everyone else isn't immortal, people come and go in your life, and people pass on, and it's a bit of a tragedy. It's an interesting dichotomy. The character lives and breathes and works in a medical examiner's office, surrounded by death, but he can't die himself."

The rest of the cast comes from so many styles there is bound to be a personality that will speak to any viewer. Alana De La Garza is the tough-as-nails Det. Jo Martinez. She isn't sure what to make of the distracted medical examiner, but ultimately finds him intriguing, though she doesn't know his secret. De La Garza has been dabbling with law in television for a decade, starting with the naval and militaristic "Jag," as well as popping in "Law & Order," "CSI: Miami," "NCIS: Los Angeles" and "Law & Order: Special Victims Unit."

Lucas Wahl, the doctor's devoted assistant, is a bit of an oddball. Although he is more death-obsessed than his liege, he offers a spark of youth to the proceedings. Portrayed by Joel David Moore ("Bones," "Avatar," 2009), he has had less serious roles in films such as "Dodgeball: A True Underdog Story" (2004) and "Grandma's Boy" (2006).

One face that may seem familiar to viewers is Judd Hirsch, who's had a long, successful career in film and television. His career took off in the mid-'70s when he played moralistic

Judd Hirsch and Ioan Gruffudd as seen in "Forever" taxi driver Alex Reiger in the hit series "Taxi." Since then, he's starred in hit shows such as "Dear John" and "Numb3rs," as well as films like "Independence Day" (1996) and "A Beautiful Mind" (2001). He has two Emmys and a Golden Globe to his name, as well as countless other nominations, including an Oscar nod for his supporting role in "Ordinary People" (1980).

Hirsch's character, Abe, is the owner of an antique shop in "Forever" and one of the few people who knows of Henry's odd affliction. Not only is Abe a friend and confidant, he also happens to be the adopted son of the immortal doctor, which adds a special twist to the already-quirky situation. So while many kids seek advice from their parents, there's often a swap in this relationship since Abe encourages his father to live a little. It's an odd sentiment, perhaps, when it's directed at a man who'll live a lot longer than even his own son.

Narrated by Gruffudd's Dr. Morgan, the show's story is also told in flashback and happens to be eerily similar to a now-defunct 2008 program. Astute viewers may recall "New Amsterdam," an ill-fated Fox series that only saw eight episodes before its demise. The similarities begin with the immortal John Amsterdam, played by Nikolaj Coster-Waldau ("Game of Thrones"), who was a mid-thirties New York homicide detective. He was a soldier seeking his true love, and his 65-yearold son is in the picture as well.

According to producer
Matthew Miller, "Forever" is not a retelling or spinoff. In fact, it was only in developing the show that Miller heard of the previous series. His idea was actually spawned by far more touching means, as he explained at Television Critics Association press tour in "It was pilot season, and I was putting my five-year-old son to bed," Miller said. "He asked me, 'Daddy, are you ever going to die?'" It's a question likely posed by most toddlers at some point, and initially Miller said no. He eventually added, "I will die, but it won't be for a very long time. ... [My son] burst out crying, and my wife came in and continued raising my child, and I went off to write television."

The old saying "time flies" certainly rings true for many of us. For Dr. Morgan, however, that idiom couldn't be further from the truth. See how the immortal doctor handles living forever when a new episode of "Forever" airs Tuesday, Oct. 28, on ABC.

'Halloween Wars' comes to a sweet finish

By Andrew Warren

TV Media

Confession time: I love Halloween. It's the one time of the year when we adults can really let loose and get in touch with our inner children. We get to gorge ourselves on candy and sweets — although maybe not quite as much as we once did. We can get all messy and creative as we tug out the slimy innards of pumpkins and then carve them up into scary faces or spooky scenes. Heck, we even get to play dress-up if we want to!

I think the best part of Halloween is that it only comes once a year. If we got to do all those fun things yearround, they just wouldn't be special - plus all that candy is most definitely not what the doctor ordered.

It's that once-a-year business that keeps the Food Network's "Halloween Wars" feeling so fresh. This may be its fourth season, but with only four episodes each year, the show doesn't get stale.

Sunday nights throughout October, we've been watching as five teams of Halloween pros got whittled down one by one, and now we've finally reached the big night. With only the top two teams remaining for the Sunday, Oct. 26, finale and a $50,000 "treat" up for grabs, you can bet that the remaining competitors will be pulling out any last tricks they may have up their sleeves on "Halloween Wars" airing on Food Network.

Even if you've missed the past three episodes, it's really not too tricky to catch on if you're only tuning in for the finale. Each team — the competition started with five — consists of three members: an expert pumpkin carver, a sugar artist and a cake decorator. At the beginning of each episode, the teams are given a theme, and then they have to craft the most elaborate, most decadent and most sweetly delicious Halloween-themed display they can pull off.

And what's the theme for this final episode, the one that will earn one team a bucket of sweet, sweet cash and send the other home shivering in terror? "Haunted Carnival" will be their final challenge, and with themes like "Mummies vs. Werewolves" and "Don't Go Into the Forest" behind them, they'll have to come up with something original to craft out of sweets and jack-o-lanterns.

Much like the day it's named after, "Halloween Wars" comes but once a year — although with four episodes it does last a little bit longer. Even if you haven't been following along, the finale promises to be a sweet finish to another year's fun. Don't miss it, Sunday, Oct. 26, on Food Network.

A 'Masterpiece' murder

PBS brings a killer to America

By Andrew Warren

TV Media

A'Masterpiece' murder: The list of things that the British do well is doubtless a long one, but television dramas must surely be near the top of it.

PBS's Sunday night standby "Masterpiece" has a long history of bringing the best of British dramas to this side of the Atlantic, and this autumn's season is no exception. With fan favorites "Miss Marple" and "Inspector Lewis" already behind us — compared to American television, British shows have notoriously short seasons — a new, two-part miniseries is next up for the public broadcaster.

"Death Comes to Pemberley" premieres the evening of Sunday, Oct. 26, with the second and final episode airing the following Sunday. Based on the novel by P.D. James, the murder mystery, which aired last year in the U.K. on BBC One, features some big-name U.K. actors who won't be strangers to American audiences.

The star-studded cast counts a number of heavyweights in its corner: Matthew Rhys ("The Americans"), Anna Maxwell Martin ("The Bletchley Circle"), Trevor Eve ("Troy," 2004), Matthew Goode ("The Good Wife"), Jenna Coleman ("Doctor Who") and Eleanor Tomlinson ("Jack the Giant Slayer," 2013).

As a sequel to "Pride and Prejudice," widely acknowledged as one of English literature's greatest works, many of the characters in "Death Comes to Pemberley" will be like family to anyone familiar with that story.

With an acclaimed novel behind it, starstudded cast and a grisly murder to solve, "Death Comes to Pemberley" has the makings of a true masterpiece. The mystery comes to PBS's "Masterpiece" on Sunday, Oct. 26.

Star struck: Until recently, it was an untold story: the tale of the women who stood by America's Cold War-era astronauts as they became the heroes of the West, always standing in their men's earthly shadows as they took to the skies — and beyond.

Last year's non-fiction book "The Astronaut Wives Club: A True Story," by Lily Koppel, peeled back the darkness that had shrouded the details of these women's lives for decades, and now ABC is bringing their stories to the screen.

"The Astronaut Wives Club" is slated to premiere in early 2015, and with an exceptional cast, it's likely to make a mid-season splash when it comes in for a landing.

Odette Annable ("House M.D."), Kenneth Mitchell ("Jericho"), Yvonne Strahovski ("24: Live Another Day"), Desmond Harrington ("Dexter"), JoAnna Garcia Swisher ("Reba"), Dominique McElligott ("Hell on Wheels") and Bret Harrison ("Breaking In") are just some of the actors who are on board.

Despite the plans for a mid-season launch, ABC has high hopes for "The Astronaut Wives Club." It skipped the pilot stage typical of new shows and was given a 10-episode order out of the box.

Though it was originally planned to premiere this past summer, more time can (hopefully) only mean more polish, and with a few extra months to massage things, "The Astronaut Wives Club" could be as awe-inspiring as a rocket ship sitting ready for takeoff.

 $\label{thm:premiere} Watch for \mbox{``The Astronauts Wives Club''} to premiere early next year on ABC.$

Lies and laughs: Marty Kaan's life is about to get even more comedic — if that's even possible.

The management consultant, played to the hilt by Don Cheadle ("Iron Man 3," 2013) in Showtime's "House of Lies," will be welcoming a friend into his life when the critically loved dramedy returns next year.

Comedian Demetri Martin has signed up to star in a multi-episode arc in the upcoming fourth season. In a show already dripping with hilarity, the funnyman certainly won't be out of place.

Beyond his standup gigs, Martin has long had a presence on both television and in the movies. He was a frequent correspondent in "The Daily Show" for a decade, was a writer for "Late Night With Conan O'Brien" and had his own sketch show on Comedy Central, "Important Things With Demetri Martin," which ran for two seasons. On the big screen, he's been seen in "Contagion" (2011), "In a World..." (2013) and "Analyze That" (2002).

On the set of "House of Lies," he'll be joining a cast that's as funny as it is talented. Kristen Bell ("Veronica Mars"), Ben Schwartz ("Parks and Recreation"), Josh Lawson ("Anchorman 2: The Legend Continues," 2013) and Dawn Olivieri ("Heroes") all star alongside Cheadle. And now, for a few episodes at least, Martin will be counted amongst their ranks.

Watch for season 4 of "House of Lies" next year on Showtime.

That's how I lost my voice, I was outside screaming,

"Don't do it!"

Microsoft has announced it will open its first flagship store in Manhattan. It's expected to be just like the Apple Store, but without all those pesky lines in front.

It was revealed today that the White House fence-jumper got deeper inside the building than previously reported. In fact, for 20 minutes, he was acting secretary of commerce. I think he signed like three pieces of legislation. When asked for comment, Joe Biden said, "He made it much further than I've ever gotten."

George Clooney says that marriage "feels pretty damn great." To which every married guy replied: "Dude, it's been four days. Give it time, George."

People are wondering why Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie were not at George Clooney's wedding. Pitt and Jolie issued a statement saying: "We're sorry, we couldn't find 18 babysitters."

Secret Service director Julia Pierson says agents are allowed to use "lethal force" to stop someone from entering the White House. Unfortunately, this may cut down on the number of trick-or-treaters at the White House this year.

The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon: Jimmy Fallon

This weekend, the world said goodbye to one of the greatest players of all time. That's right, George Clooney finally got married.

Congratulations to Chelsea Clinton, who gave birth to a baby girl named Charlotte on Friday. Or as Hillary described the baby, "Third in line to the throne."

Chelsea Clinton gave birth to a baby girl. And get this, she's already said her first word: "Iowa."

The Late Show: David Letterman

Over the weekend, George Clooney got married. Matt Damon and Julia Roberts were there. What was it, a wedding or a heist?

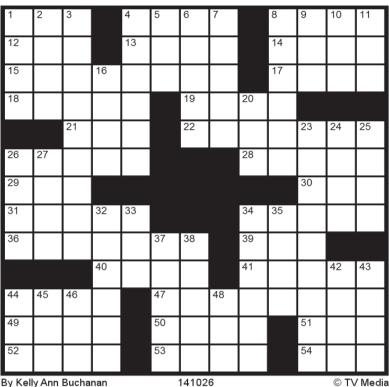

Evil dictator Kim Jong Un has not been seen in three weeks. I hate it when a recluse disappears, don't you?

The bachelor party is still going on after George Clooney's wedding. He's been having a bachelor party for the last 20 years.

Autumn is a beautiful time of year. At the White House, squirrels are rounding up nuts on the lawn, which is more than the Secret Service is doing.

A few weeks ago, President Obama was riding in an elevator, and it turns out a guy on the elevator had a gun. This is pretty scary stuff. Not as scary as riding in an elevator with Ray Rice, but still scary.
